OC Railroad finds support & opposition

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

Residents are organizing to stop the railroad from coming to town. Last Friday a group of men, women and children took their protest into the streets with sound effects and banners.

The early morning protest attracted some attention as the group of 50 or so protestors concentrated on cost, noise, safety and pollution issues that they say are at the heart of their concern.

Meanwhile the state agreed to extend the public comment period another 30 days, which moves the new deadline to Aug. 2.

Just last week selectmen joined selectmen in neighboring Hingham in requesting an extension of the comment period. The local officials were looking for a 45 day extension.

While the protestors were visible Friday morning, the first sign of strong public support for the plan came Sunday as Dr. Edward Woods took a petition in favor of the Old Colony line to the town's recycling/transfer center.

Selectmen plan some action against tenants

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

As the board of selectmen grapple with the issue of whether to evict tenants who have fallen behind in rent in a town-owned apartment, they are learning that eviction is a legal proceeding with very precise steps that must be followed "to the letter of the law."

The requirements vary depending on the type of eviction and the kind of tenancy. Simply put, a landlord can evict either "for possession" or "for non-payment of rent." There are slight variations depending on whether the tenant has a lease — a tenant for years — or is a tenant at will..

A landlord can evict a tenant at will for any reason or for no reason, except in retaliation for a tenant pursuing his legal rights.

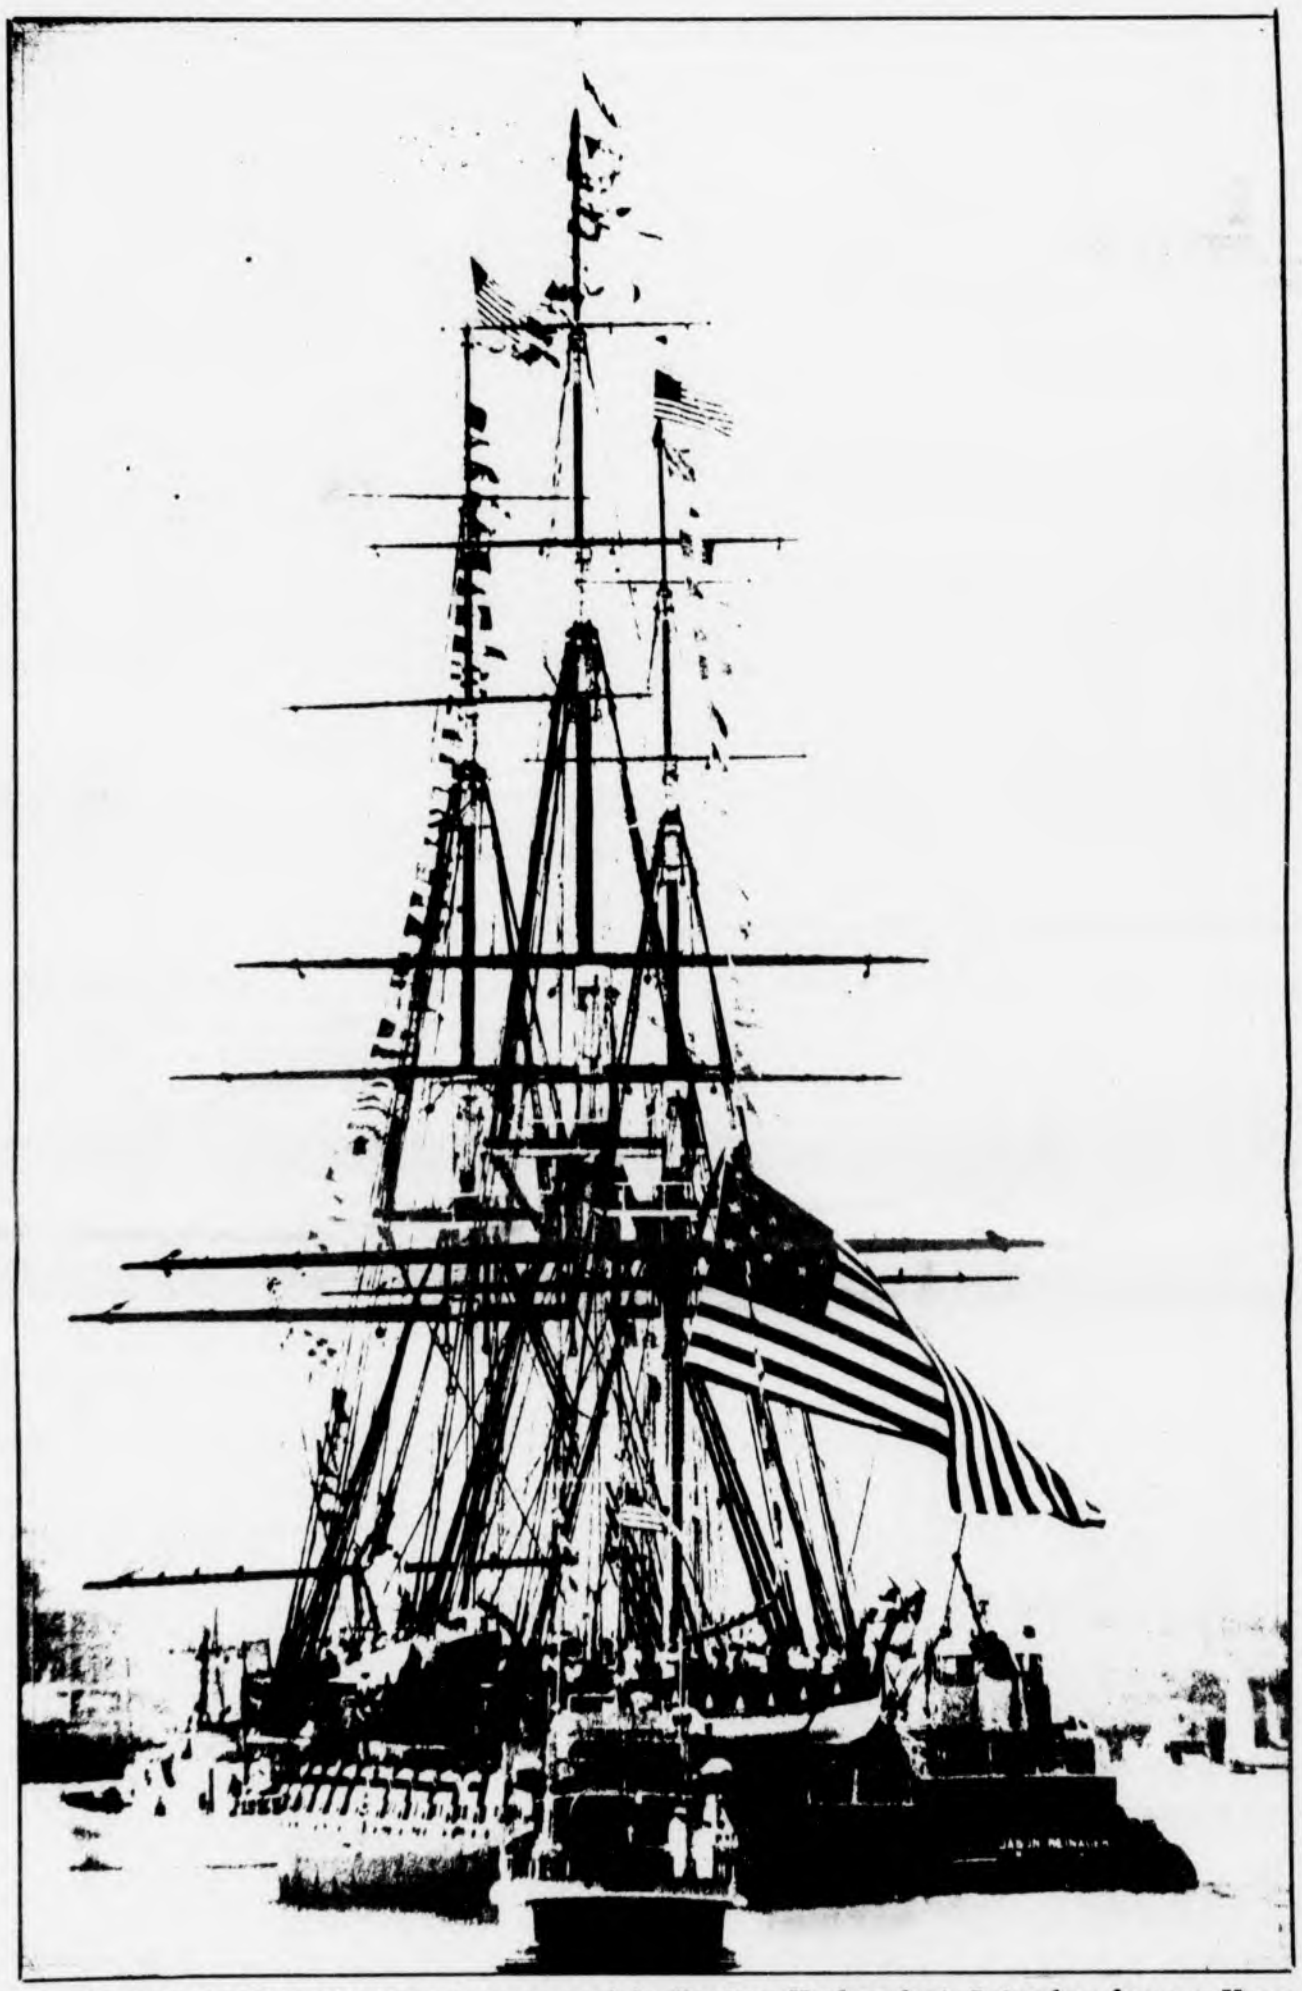
If the tenant has a lease, the eviction must be for some cause specified in the lease. The landlord must prove in court that the tenant "broke" his lease before the judge will grant the eviction.

An eviction is for any reason except non-payment of rent, the landlord must give the tenant a notice to quit for possession.

NOTICE TO QUIT FOR POSSESSION

The notice must give the tenant the same length of time as the rental period or 30 days, whichever is longer. The notice must be in writing and end at the same time as the rental period.

When the case goes to court, the judge may allow the tenant additional time to find another apartment. This is known as a stay of execution and judgment. It is available only to tenants fully paid up in rent. The judge may grant a stay of six months, or as long as 12 months for an elderly or handicapped tenant.



If there is a lease, it should also specify the kind of notice required, but the law stipulates that, at a minimum, a tenant is entitled to one rental period or 30 days, whichever is greater.

NOTICE FOR NON-PAYMENT OF RENT

The second type of eviction is for non-payment of rent. This is the most common reason for eviction.

Both tenants at will and tenants with leases are only entitled to a 14-day notice to quit. The notice

Minehunter sweeps Boston Harbor

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

The conflict in the Persian Gulf and the Straits of Hormuz demonstrated how easy it is for terrorists to lay mines. It is a lesson the Navy took to heart.

According to the Navy, although mines are easy to manufacture and deploy, they are extremely difficult to detect and dispose of. They have been used in every major conflict since the Russo-Japanese War of 1904.

If knowledge is power, the Navy intends to be all-powerful when it comes to mines.

On June 10, the Navy minehunter, CT-1, was "homeported" in Boston. The commander of the CT-1 is Lieutenant Commander William F. Malloy Jr., a Naval reserve officer from Cohasset.

Malloy graduated from the U.S. Naval Academy in 1980. He served aboard the USS McCandless and the USS Valdez and completed deployments to the Mediterranean, the North Atlantic, the Caribbean and Central America.

During his service, Malloy received several decorations, including the Navy Commendation Medal, Sea Service Ribbon with Bronze Star, Naval Reserve Sea Service Ribbon and Navy Expert Rifle and Pistol Ribbons. He is also a qualified Naval parachutist.

Malloy left active duty and transferred into the Reserves in 1988 to attend Harvard University where he received a Master's degree from the Kennedy School. He took over as Officer in Charge of Craft of Opportunity Mine Unit 2201 in June 1989.

The CT-1 is part of the Craft of Opportunity Program designed to provide protection to military and commercial shipping. The vessel is a reactivated Navy patrol boat converted into a minehunter.

In order to fulfill its purpose, the CT-1 will be outfitted with high tech side scan sonar equipment. Malloy's crew will map the ocean floor along the sea

Cohasset's week

Selectmen to study trust

The selectmen agreed June 11 to support the COMPACT Trust of the Massachusetts Municipal Association in principle, but they want more information before they will confirm that support.

The COMPACT Trust will provide a guaranteed proportion of taxes to cities and towns. Selectman Jane Goedecke is all in favor of that, but said the Trust becomes disconcertingly vague about who will constitute the board of directors and who will appoint them.

According to Executive Secretary Greg Doyon, the original proposal gave the governor authority to appoint the board. That did not reassure Goedecke or the other members of the board.

Bank dividend announced

The Board of Directors of Cohasset Savings Bank (NASDAQ-CHTB) has declared a quarterly cash dividend of $.06 per share, payable July 2, to stockholders of record June 15.

This continues the dividend rate that prevailed throughout 1989 and is the tenth quarterly cash dividend paid since the bank converted to stock form in 1987. The bank has 1,002.978 sharers outstanding.

Cohasset Savings Bank is a 145-year-old community thrift institution serving a popular residential area of Massachusetts' South Shore.

Total assets at March 31, 1990 were $64,437,000 and stockholders equity was $12,574,000 at that date.

Protestors line up in Cohasset Village last Friday morning near the old train crossing as they attempt to draw attention to the plans for restoring the Old Colony line to Scituate.

Julia Guild shows what she thinks of the train.

New officers

The following officers and directors were elected at the Social Service League's annual meeting:

President, Mary Hartwell; vice president, Debbie Martin; secretary, Mary Ahearn; treasurer, Ginny Riley.

Committee chairmen: Social service, Ann Hublitz; nursing, Meryl Graham; personnel, Barbara Donahue; consignment shop, Andrea Merrill.

Board of directors: Jane Porter, Annellen Walsh, Adrienne Thompson, Eileen Corbett, Helen Hooper, Mary Larson, Alice Riley, Joanne Chittick, Marguerite Hill, Jeff Steele, Judy Dwyer, Mimi Mulvey, Lanny Baccari, Millie Mitman, Phyllis Grayken.

Advisory board: Legal, Valerie Browne-Matherly; salary, George Fowle Jr.; spiritual, Rev. Gary A. Ritts; financial, David Ralff; social worker, Margaret Samlsel; R.N., Corinne H. Cahill.

No payoff for dead critters

William Quigley may find his paycheck a little thinner these days. The Board of Health voted to pay the animal control officer a lump sum of $30 each month for picking up dead animals rather than $5 apiece.

In exchange, Quigley no longer has to do paperwork for every animal he disposes, only dead pets. Quigley reported 22 dogs were struck and killed by automobiles last year.

Milliken Field is closed

Milliken Field remains closed to all sports now through Aug. 15 for maintenance work. The track can still be used, according to Tree and Park Supt. Peter Laugelle.

Cohasset's week

Residents had a chance to look over the restored Konohassett Satuday thanks to the historical society.

Local potholes paved over

Cohasset residents will find the highways and byways a little smoother thanks to the highway department.

Earlier this week, highway crews were out resurfacing Cobb Lane, Foxwell Lane, Hewes Road, Chester Street, Roslin Road, Stone Road, Jenkins Place, Union Street, Old Country Lane and Cudworth Road.

Until the work is completed, no parking will be allowed on the streets.

The finishing touch will be street sweeping scheduled for the week of July 9.

Railroad concern

that backs up to the tracks, said his only concern about the plan to revive a commuter train to South Station involve the possible cost.

"I'm in favor of it if the cost is feasible," he said.

His decision to seek signatures was made after reading stories in the press that focused on what opponents of the plan had to say.

"I did it more out of my own curiosity," he said.

He obtained 125 signatures on his petition in a few hours Sunday.

What he found was that about 55 percent of the people supported the train. Another group – that he estimated at 10 to 15 percent – haven't made up their mind.

"These figures are just estimates," he said. "But I think the opposition is sort of emotional and inclined to exaggeration."

He met opponents of the plan as he gathered his signatures and listened to their concerns.

"They want everything to stay the way it is and I can't blame them for that. But it is ridiculous not to have any public transportation into Boston," he said.

The Greenbush line is the only one of the three branches of the Old Colony restoration project that's met with serious opposition. The rail project will cost an estimated $562 million and serve 15,000 passengers.

The protestors leafletted cars in Cohasset Village during their demonstration with a paper that pointed out the cost amounts to $37,000 per passenger.

"Cohasset will incur approximately a $400,000 per year assessment by the MBTA. With less than 300 Cohasset residents expected to use the train, it makes no sense," the handout states.

The paper went on to point out the 12 street crossings in town and with 24 trains traveling through town, people can expect 288 soundings of the horns and whistles six days a week.

"The trains will cross Cohasset's busiest pedestrian and auto intersections. The train will add danger to every trip to and from the Osgood School, the Deer Hill School, the High School, the Swim Center, the Little League Field, the Paul Pratt Library, the Community Center, the Common and the Village," the paper says.

The anti-train protest last Friday at four locations in town brought out a crowd of 50

Debbie Cook, one of the town's two representatives to the Citizens Advisory Committee, said she hopes people will stop and think about the plans.

Joni Bean said there are better mass transit options available and she thinks that if the state has all this money to put into transportation, the money should subsidize some of the existing systems – like the commuter boat which operates out of the Hingham Shipyard.

"The railroad is antiquated," Bean said.

"It's not efficient, it's expensive. It will encroach on residential property."

The group planned to stop traffic as part of its morning demonstration. The idea was to block the roads for about 90 seconds, the time a train would take to cross.

Monica McKenney said she thinks a monorail down Route 3 would be a better solution.

"People think trains are romantic," McKenney said.

"This is going back 50 years and all it will do is pull people from other public transportation like the commuter boat."

The projected figures for ridership included in the environmental impact statement show only 5,000 new commuters using the railroad. Most of the riders would be siphoned from buses or the subway system.

Maryann Sherman and Anne Collins, two Hingham residents, opposed to the railroad, stood with the group of protestors last week.

They said they hope to continue these protests along the tracks in other communities.

Hunting the harbor

routes from Maine to Newport, RI. Twenty-one other vessels in the COOPMINEUNIT headed by Captain Frank T. Avignone III cover the remainder of the Eastern seaboard.

Cohasset's Malloy got to show off his new command during the Salute to Charlestown celebration held the weekend of June 16 and 17. The CT-1 participated in the parade of ships escorting the USS Constitution, more affectionately known as Old Ironsides.

Now Malloy settles down to the task of training two more crews. He has one year to get his crews ready for certification. When he is finished, he will have four crews capable of manning the CT-1 during its weekend missions.

Each crew consists of nine people: a craftmaster, two sonar technicians, two boatswainmates, two enginemen, a quartermaster and an electrician. The training focuses on seamanship, engineering, shiphandling, and damage control.

Included under damage control is firefighting, a particularly important piece of damage control on a wooden boat.

Speaking of the consequences of a fire aboard a wooden vessel like the CT-1, Captain Avignone said, "Either you put the fire out or you die." The motivation to pay attention during that part of the training is particularly high.

The Navy installs the new side scan sonar equipment in August. Malloy estimates it will take between two and three weeks to train his crew on the new equipment.

Although the boat has a full galley and can sleep 10, Malloy said the CT-1 was most likely to tackle its responsibilities in segments that would allow the crew members, all reservists, to return home at night or only require them to be onboard for one night.

The members of the Gold Crew who were on duty for the "Salute to Charlestown" are thrilled with their assignment to the minehunter. The opportunity to serve their reserve duty onboard instead of in a classroom is welcome.

South Shore area crew members included John Kane and Paul Walkins of Weymouth and Terry Guzzo of Rockland.

Kane transferred from the Army to the Navy reserves one year ago. Kane is employed as a liability claims adjustor for an independent insurance agency. He also works as a EMT and is pursuing a career as a registered nurse.

Walkins spent four years in active duty and has been in the reserves for one year. In civilian life, he is employed by a private contractor in the construction business.

Guzzo served in active duty for three years and has been in the reserves for 11 years. He is employed as a welder in Braintree.

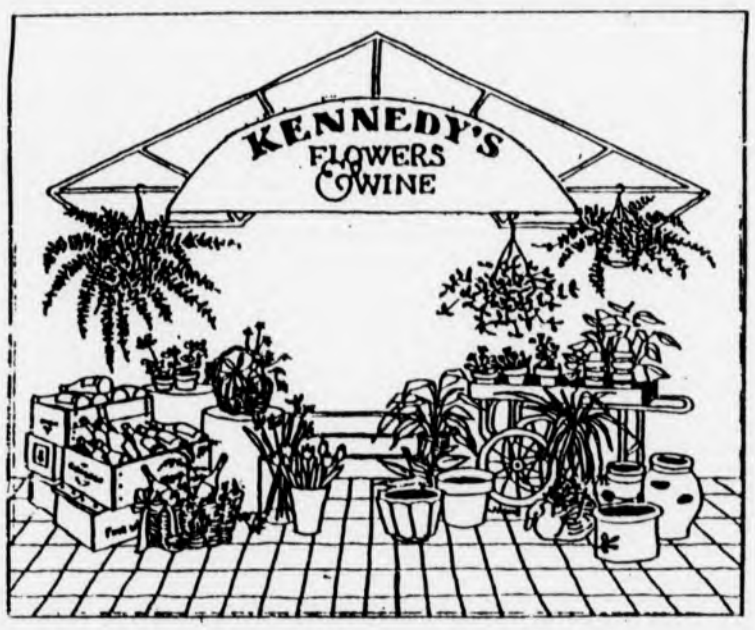
Although Malloy and Avignone aren't anticipating finding any mines as they patrol the New England waters during peacetime, their maps will provide a benchmark that will allow the Navy to identify the existence of any mine or other underwater debris. In the event of hostilities or terrorist attack, a mine would be rapidly detected.

If the CT-1 located a mine, it would proceed to identify the location and lead ships around the danger until proper measures could be taken to dispose of the mine.

What the Navy would not do is call in a minesweeper.

According to Malloy and Avignone, the purpose of the minehunter and its sonar equipment is to pinpoint a mine so Navy divers could "surgically" remove the threat.

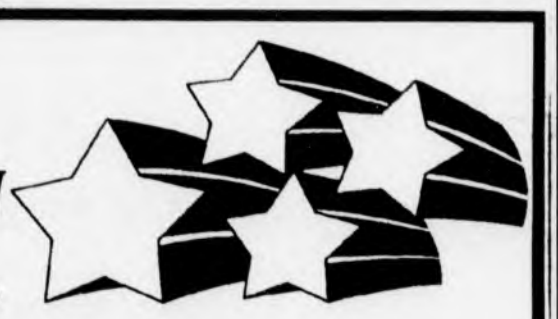
When Malloy isn't on duty, he can be found at the firm of Malloy and Corry where he works as a legislative counsel/lobbyist.



Malloy represents a variety of clients ranging from the state police, who hired the firm to represent them as the state seeks ways of consolidating the state police, metropolitan police, capitol police and registry police forces, to an association of ophthalmologist.

Malloy isn't on the infamous list of people waiting for a Cohasset mooring.

"Now that I have this command, I don't need my own boat," he joked.



William Malloy stands at the helm of his minehunter. He's not interested in getting a harbor mooring here.

Susan married Michael Dalton at the Second Congregational Church on June 9, and a reception followed at the Barker Tavern in Scituate. The newlyweds will be living in Brighton and we wish them health and happiness.

❑Happy 75th birthday to Ruth Silvia. June 12 was the big day, and we are happy to report that Ruth looks and feels wonderful.

❑Everyone is talking about the mural that was painted on the wall of the lot by Curtis Compact. It's beautifully done, and it is amazing how many people stop and study it! Peter Collins, Ted Graham, Kasey Smith, Bethany Maciel, Ann Senechal, Anne Lindgren, Christa Asnbergs, Theresa O'Brien, Andrew Ross, Cecillia Candia, Bethany Quinton, Nichole Vasseur, Kathy Smith, Ann Dane, Kristin Niessink, Amy Silvia, Melissa Cannarozzi, Nicole Haefner, Maureen Smith, Kate Barrett, Erin McAllister, Katie Brennock, Kendra Gray and Peter Ferenz all contributed their artwork under the direction of Colleen Lucas, the art teacher at CHS. The paint was paid for by the local merchants buying flowers from Ginger Ferenz, who then offered to plant them. What a group effort! And a unique way to brighton our town! We all owe them a huge thank you. Be sure to tell them so when you see them.

❑It's with pleasure that I tell what a lot of people (especially her students) have been waiting to hear! Marie Price is up and around town again, looking fit as a fiddle and raring to go! As most of you know, Marie had hip replacement surgery, and she is recovering beautifully. I'll bet it took her ages to get through Stop and Shop the other night, with all of the people stopping to talk to her. Keep up the good work Marie, it's nice to see you up and about.

❑Under the not-so-pleasant news, Mike Gill, a teacher at CHS, is really upset! It seems he brought his baseball card collection to school to share with everyone and someone stole them! Some of them were his Dad's, so you can just imagine the sentiment that is involved! Whoever you are, just bring them back! There will be no questions asked, but there will certainly be one happy Mike Gill.

❑Congratulations to Robert and Jennifer Piepenbrink on the birth of their son, Daniel Todd Piepenbrink. Daniel was born at South Shore Hospital on June 15. Needless to say, Fred and Shirley are beside themselves with wonderment and joy, it's grand being a grandparent!

❑Everyone knows Mary Fleming and what a wonderful lady she is! What you may not know is that Mary has created a foundation for Cohasset residents who choose to go to both Boston College High School and Holy Cross College. She has an annual scholarship put aside for just that student! The reason that she chose those two schools is her brother, John, who is ill, and that was one of his wishes. John is in a VA hospital, and would be thrilled to know that someone will follow in his footsteps education wise. What a wonderful thing for Mary Fleming to do!

❑Julie Guild and Marge Doherty, formerly of Coastal Country Properties, have moved five doors down the street to join Chris Ford at Hallmark 100 properties. Now located at 89 Ripley Road, everyone is excited about the move. Julie is the past president of the Plymouth multiple listing service, and Marge is a state director of the Mass Association of Realtors. Chris said he was very excited about the merge, and the gals must be too. Best of luck to all of you in your joint venture!

❑ Anne E. Taylor of Cohasset, Massachusetts received the BA degree, June 7 at Washington and Lee University.

Commencement activities for more than 360 Washington and Lee students were held on the university's historic Front Campus.

Taylor majored in Classics. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Willard S. Taylor of Cohasset.

❑ The results are in, all the cookies have been counted and there is no doubt about it — Anne Lindgren is the 1990 top Girl Scout Cookie Seller from Cohasset.

Lindgren is personally responsible for bringing the goodness of Girl Scout Cookies to the greatest number of Cohasset residents, she sold an amazing 429 boxes of cookies!

The Cookie Sale is vital to the Girl Scout program; the money raised supports multicultural programs throughout the year. These programs are designed to help girls grow into caring, competent and confident young women. Every box of cookies sold is support for Girl Scouts.

Patriots' Trail Girl Scout Council, New England's largest Girl Scout Council serving more than 37,000 girls and adult volunteers in the Greater Boston area, congratulates Anne Lindgren on her stupendous sales.

That's the news from here for this week. As your summer plans get underway, remember to let us know what they are. We would love to hear about your trips, events, birthdays, weddings, etc. Give me a call at 383-0560.

❑Congratulations go to Christopher McElroy, who attained the highest level of scouting as an Eagle Scout last week! As I have mentioned before in Around Town, the whole town benefitted from his project, he fixed the file cabinets for the town hall for various departments. There were 80 people on hand to watch the ceremony, and we congratulate Chris on his efforts to attain the highest rank that a scout can achieve.

All athletes mark this date on your calendar! Boys soccer and football physicals will be held on Thursday, Aug. 23 at 1:30 p.m. at CHS. Girls soccer and field hockey players will have their physicals on Friday, Aug. 24 at 9:15 a.m. A physical is required for all students planning to play any of these sports, so mark that date now, lest you forget.

That's the news from here for this week, please don't forget to call with yours!

Town owned duplex is becoming a "money pit"

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

A few years ago, local theaters were showing a movie about a couple who bought an old house where everything that could go wrong, did. The house — and the movie — was called the Money Pit. The town-owned duplex on Government Island is Cohasset's version of a money pit.

The historic building — it was the Minot Light lightkeeper's house — requires extensive repairs. At the same time the town is facing repair bills, one of the two tenants has fallen seriously behind in their rent. The selectmen discussed eviction proceedings in their June 11 executive session.

The town already has plans drawn up and approved for replacing the failing septic system. Everything is all set to go. The only thing the town needs is the money to pay the bills.

The selectmen received one estimate of $9,550. They're hoping Harold Litchfield and the highway department can help them do the job for less.

The septic system is on the selectmen's agenda for June 25.

The septic system is only part of the problem. This building is chock-a-block with violations of the state sanitary code and the building code.

In March, building inspector, Robert Egan, went out to inspect the property. On May 21, he wrote a report on his findings.

According to Egan, the building had problems both inside and out.

The windows are dried out and no longer fit tightly in their tracks. Egan recommended installing new vinyl balances, repairing broken window panes and recaulking the existing storm windows.

One tenant has complained that there are squirrels in the walls. Egan suggested this may require the services of an exterminator. Once the squirrel population is eliminated, their access routes into the walls must be blocked up.

Egan said installing a cap on the chimney would eliminate the rainwater in the firebox complaint. He also believes that new flashing around the chimney would cure the leak in the bedroom ceiling.

The kitchen floor in one of the units was one of the most serious problems Egan found at the duplex. The floor has rotted through. The tenants have "repaired" the hazard with a piece of plywood and topped the area with carpeting.

The bulkheads for both units need to be completely replaced.

Leaky faucets and other plumbing woes require professional attention as well.

Egan suggested that the selectmen may want to consider installing a "new" kitchen to replace the antiquated and inefficient set up.

Egan did not tackle the septic system problems, lead paint contamination or the unheated rooms in his report. Egan estimated it could cost the town $20,000 to $30,000 for basic repairs, more if the town tackles the unheated rooms and remodels the kitchens.

Virtually every problem at the duplex is a violation of the state sanitary code that establishes the minimum standards of habitability that a landlord must maintain.

The code is enforced by the local board of health. According to health agent Dr. Joseph Godzik, the Cohasset Board of Health has not been asked to inspect the premises by either the tenants or the selectmen.

Failure by a landlord to maintain a safe and habitable living environment carries both civil and criminal penalties. A landlord can't get off the hook because the tenant is behind in rent or because the rent is low. The provisions of the sanitary code cannot be waived or ignored.

During the budget hearings, some members of the advisory committee suggested selling the building to end the money drain. That suggestion was not popular with the historic commission. The members consider the house, built around 1850, one of the most historic buildings in Cohasset. They want it listed in the National Register.

Selectmen Chairman Rocco Laugelle was also adamant during the January hearings. He vowed to fight to retain ownership of the property.

"Government Island will never be sold," he vowed then. He may be called to back up his sentiments in the current round of debates.

A historical appeal

Saturday the town was treated to a look into its past as members of the town's historical society brought back the Konohassett, a fire engine from the days before engines.

The piece of brightly restored equipment was trotted into Cohasset Village where it remained on display throughout the afternoon.

Meanwhile people toured the nearby museums free of charge for the day.

Currently there's a firefighting display on the second floor of the town's maritime museum.

It's enough to bring a smile to anyone's day.

The Konohassett, which would never fit inside the museum, was never part of the regular firefighting equipment of the town. Rather it was considered an antique when it first arrived here in 1911 after being purchased by what was then the Volunteer Veteran Firemens' Association, a group who banded together to compete in firemens' musters.

It was used by the company from 1911 to some time in the 1920's.

The Konohassett was built in New York in 1865. It remained in use in New York until after the turn of the century.

The old hand pumper became outdated when public water supplies changed the needs of fire fighters.

In 1977 the Konohassett was donated to the historical society by a private collector. Since then it's been waiting for restoration work that is now beautifully complete.

According to David Wadsworth, curator of the historical society, the old pumper may someday be installed in a yet-to-be-constructed building near the Lothrop House.

He said the historical society would like to have a place to display the apparatus.

We applaud the idea of finding a way to show off such a fine piece of history.

We aren't sure the grounds of the Lothrop House are the best possible location for such an endeavor. We'd like to hear some discussion of other potential sites.

But the idea of establishing a permanent and visible home for the Konohassett deserves support.

It was our mistake

Last week in the editorial about the change of principals at the Joseph Osgood School, we took school officials to task for appointing the new principal during an unposted school committee session.

No sooner were the papers in the mail when School Superintendent Stephen Hart called the Mariner to ask for an apology.

Hart pointed out that the meeting on Monday, June 4, was adjourned until Thursday, June 7, for the purpose of appointing the principal.

He said the adjournment was to give school committee members a chance to think over the information. Mon-day the committee had spent about three hours interviewing the top three candidates for the job.

He said the committee adjourned to a time certain to avoid the necessity of posting a new meeting date. He said town counsel, Richard Henderson, advised him the procedure was legal.

We apologize to the school committee, the superintendent and Linda Whitney, the new principal.

They are correct. The procedure is entirely legal.

Studds thanks well-wishers after attack

To the Editor:

I am writing to express my deep gratitude for the outpouring of concern following the physical attack on me last Thursday night in Washington. To the scores of friends, known and unknown, who have called or written over the last few days, I want to say a heartfelt thanks. I cannot exaggerate how much this has meant to me.

Although bruised and sore, I may well owe my life to the four witnesses who cared enough to "get involved" that night. I am eager to thank them in person, and I hope that their actions will serve as an example to others.

By all accounts, this was a random act of motiveless violence which could happen to anyone. This crime has gotten the attention that it has because it was committed — probably to the surprise of the attackers -- against a person already in the public eye. It is sobering to remember, however, how many people live in the shadow of urban violence. The reaction of the passers-by — to approach the scene, follow the fleeing assailants and volunteer to testify for the prosecutors — speaks volumes about the best instincts of men and women of goodwill.

To the Editor:

On behalf of the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation, I wanted to thank Alison Cohen for her time and effort in putting together a wonderful, informative article about Jane Leahy's Fashion Show and the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation. You'll be happy to know that Jane and her friends pulled off quite an amazing show. The evening was such a wonderful success and attended by over 150 people from the local community.

We learned of diabetics in the community whom we had never known and educated many people who did not know the devastating effects of juvenile diabetes. The coverage you provided enabled us to let those in your neighborhood understand the disease and the mission of JDF.

Funds raised through this event will contribute to the 14.1 million dollars JDF International has committed to research this year. Over $900,000 will fund projects in Massachusetts. Today, JDFI is the largest non-profit funder of diabetes research.

If JDF is to reach its goal of curing diabetes it will take the enthusiasm, cooperation and dedication of people like Alison.

Thanks!

Sincerely,
Anne Yudowitz

Tenants have habitability rights

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

Under state law, every tenant is entitled to a safe and habitable environment.

In legal terms it's known as the "Implied Warranty of Habitability." Failure to keep to the standard is a breach of the contract between landlord and tenant. The law provides remedies.

The state sanitary code establishes what the minimum requirements for a safe and habitable environment are. The code covers everything from the square footage and ceiling height of legal rooms to the number of electrical outlets to be provided in each room.

Some of the more important provisions of the sanitary code are:

• HEAT: Every room must be heated and the landlord must maintain the heating system in good operating condition. The code sets a minimum temperature to which a room must be heated between September and June when the landlord pays for the fuel.

• INSECTS AND RODENTS: If the dwelling has two or more units, it is the responsibility of the landlord to maintain the unit free from rodents, cockroaches and other insects. The landlord is responsible for the cost of extermination.

• KITCHENS: The landlord must provide a kitchen containing a sink large enough to wash dishes and kitchen utensils, a stove and oven in good repair (except when the lease states that the tenant must provide his own stove and oven) and a space for the installation of a refrigerator. The kitchen floor must covered with a smooth, nonabsorbent, waterproof material. If the kitchen is carpeted, the carpet backing must be solid and nonabsorbent to prevent the passage of moisture to the floor beneath.

• BATHROOMS: Each dwelling unit must contain a bathroom containing a toilet with a toilet seat, a wash basin and a tub or shower. The room must have a door that can be locked. If the bathroom lacks a window, some other form of ventilation must be provided.

The plumbing fixtures must be maintained free of leaks and the flooring must meet the same standards as the kitchen.

• HOT WATER: The landlord must provide and maintain water heating facilities capable of heating and supplying hot water at a temperature between 110° and 130°. The water must be provided in sufficient quantity and pressure to satisfy ordinary use of all plumbing fixtures.

• STRUCTURAL ELEMENTS: The foundation, floors, walls, doors, windows, ceilings, roof, staircases, porches, chimneys and other structural elements must be maintained in good condition. They must also be rodent-proof, weathertight, watertight and free from chronic dampness.

• SEWAGE DISPOSAL: The owner must provide each dwelling with a sanitary drainage system connected to the public sewerage system or another means of sewage disposal that meets the state environmental code. The sewage disposal system must be maintained in good repair.

• LEAD PAINT: If there are children under the age of six living in the unit, any lead paint in the unit must be removed in strict conformance with state law. Lead paint and lead paint dust are extremely toxic and can lead to brain damage and death.

Analysis

If a tenant believes his unit has violations of the code, there a several ways of dealing with them.

Advising the landlord of the problem and asking that it be repaired is one solution. Many lawyers advise putting the request in writing.

If the landlord fails to respond, a tenant can request an inspection by the local board of health. The board of health must inspect the premises for the defects complained about. A tenant can also request a comprehensive inspection.

If violations of the state sanitary code are found, the health inspector will notify the landlord and specify a time period for the landlord to make repairs. Certain violations require repairs to be underway within 24 hours of notification. If the landlord fails to make the repairs, he could be subject to fines or imprisonment.

Other tenant remedies include rent withholding, repair and deduct and civil and criminal law suits. All are serious steps and should only be undertaken after consulting with a lawyer.

Rent withholding means exactly what it says. A tenant must be fully paid up in rent before beginning rent withholding.

A tenant considering rent withholding should first appeal to the landlord in writing asking for the repairs to be made. If the landlord does not, an inspection by the health department for sanitary code violations is the next step.

If violations continue to exist, the tenant should notify the landlord, in writing, that he is withholding part or all of the rent and specify the reasons for the action. All rent that comes due after this notification must be set aside.

Repair and deduct is another means of ensuring that necessary repairs are made. A tenant can deduct up to four months rent under state law if four conditions are met.

• The health inspector or a court must find the existence of sanitary code violations or other violations that "endanger or materially impair the health, safety or well-being of a tenant."

• The owner or agent has been notified, in writing, of the defects.

• The landlord failed to begin repairs within five days from the date of the notice or make substantial progress on the repairs within 14 days. Certain conditions may cause the inspecting agency or court to demand repairs in less time.

• The violation was not substantially cause by the tenant or another person under the control of the tenant.

Lawsuits are also possible under both civil and criminal statutes. A tenant contemplating filing suit should seek legal counsel. If he cannot afford a private attorney, a legal services agency may be able to provide representation.

Copies of the complete state sanitary code may be purchased from the State House Bookstore, State House, Room 116, Boston, MA 02133. For more information, call the bookstore at (617) 727-2834.

Cohasset Agrees CARE to Recycle Everything

By Alix White

Trouble-shooting at the RTF

Oil: We are now accepting motor oil from your cars, boats, lawnmowers etc. While there is currently a law in Massachusetts that mandates a store that sells oil to also accept an equal amount of used oil, the recycling committee has set up an oil collection at the RTF. Oil needs to be disposed of properly as it pollutes soil and ground water when it is improperly disposed.

Leave your used oil in capped containers on the tray by the tire collection trailer which is just after the office on your right.

Clothes: We need drivers desperately to help us take clothes to the Pine Street Inn. If you drive to the South Station area regularly or even once in a while, please consider taking a load of clothes. For more information, contact Arthur Lehr at 383-0388.

Tis the Season

I've grown to expect it. The time seems to be right. The first flush of summer, the lovely perfectly cool, perfectly warm nights, the foggy, mysterious mornings. Everything seems in readiness for another oil spill. I've marked it on my calendar since 1976. That's the year I worked on an oil spill on the St. Lawrence River.

It was a foggy night at the end of June in 1976. The pilot had boarded the tug in Massena, N.Y. His job this night was to guide the tug, which was pushing an oil barge upriver to the Great Lakes, through the narrow and rocky stretch of the river known as the Thousand Islands. Pilots are mandatory from Massena to Oswego, N.Y. It didn't matter. The tug got off course and hit a shoal dumping 300,000 gallons of crude oil.

Were we lucky it was only 300,0-00 gallons? Maybe. Were we lucky there was an oil spill company two miles away ready to mobilize hundreds of people to clean it up? Maybe. Maybe we were luckier than the people and wildlife along the Cape Cod Canal. This same barge had just come back from repairs. It had hit a shoal weeks earlier there dumping some of its cargo as it hit.

After the fog lifted, the St. Lawrence spill travelled as fast as the prevailing south west wind would take it. Eventually 200 miles of shoreline would be contaminated. Much of that shoreline still has oil residue.

The oil travelled past the nesting grounds of the great blue heron. Oil does not discriminate what it will land on — from millionaires to microbes. It just lands and attaches itself. Someone brought a heron in for me to clean. As I held it in my arms, I watched as its feathers, so weighted down with oil, fell off its back one by one until I could see its spine. The bird was taken away from me. It was killed so that it would not suffer any more. I was stunned. How could the oil that I depend on so heavily be so deadly?

We worked on that spill for nearly a year. We barely scratched the surface. It was just like the hundreds of other oil spills: barely 10 percent of the oil collected, property damage in the millions of dollars, damage to wildlife incalculable, loss of business in the tens of millions of dollars.

This was a tiny spill — barely worth mentioning compared to the super tanker spills, but it was devastating to that river. The St. Lawrence River and the Great Lakes combine to make the largest body of fresh water in the world. As we learned from working on that spill, it is a fact to be taken seriously. We watched first hand a river be destroyed by one accident. It taught us to speak up and demand protection of this waterway.

I am preparing to change the month on my calendar from June to July. Let's see, this season there was the fire aboard the supertanker, Mega Borg, and a fuel spill from the grounded cruise ship, Bermuda Star. Gosh, that's just a year after the supertanker, Valdez, ran aground in Alaska.

We must understand the seriousness of these spills. The physical earth cannot continue to absorb our mistakes. Each year we continue to use more oil than the previous one. We also continue to import more oil — usually by single hull supertanker. The biggest user for oil is gasoline for our cars. While we continue to alter our lifestyles to use less gasoline, we must push for stronger mass transportation like the train, busses, and subway. We also need to take seriously the way we use energy in our homes, offices and public spaces before we are mandated to do so. We must push for the protection of all waterways by recommending the passage of The Oil Pollution Liability Act of 1990. It would include stronger safety standards such as double hulls, contingency plans and liability.

The last paragraph of interview with Shuma Chakravarty, assistant minister of the Vedanta Centre should have read: "Service to needy people helps our spiritual life. Ego-centricity breeds loneliness. The best remedy for loneliness is respect for all life and unselfish service."

CYAA picnic a success

To the Editor:

As president of the Cohasset Youth Athletic Association, I wish to thank the many people that helped to make our annual picnic an overwhelming success.

Special thanks should be given to Dave and Marie Buckley, Alan and Bonnie DeVito, Mark and Janice Batts, Kevin and Ann O'Connor, Kevin and Peggy Lewis, Bob and Caroline Morgan and to Nancy Kinchla.

This year our program has expanded by over 65 children. We are approaching almost 400 children. In addition, this year the CYAA will sponsor four teams in the Suburban Youth Baseball Program. This program for children ages 9, 10, 11 and 12, will play a 40 game (10 for each team) schedule with teams from the suburban Boston area.

I am very grateful to all our coaches, sponsors and participating parents, they are the people that keep this program so vital.

My hope, when I became president of this program, was to provide every child with an experience they would remember fondly as being sheer happiness and joy. With half the season gone by, my goal for this program remains very much intact.

I sincerely thank those adults that have participated at every level by interacting with the children.

Sincerely
John Kinchla
President, CYAA

Tenants have a right to quite a bit

can be served as soon as the day after the rent was due. There is no requirement that the landlord give the tenant a "grace" period.

Every tenant has the legal right to "cure" an eviction for non-payment.

A tenant without a lease can stop the eviction by paying the full amount due within 10 days of receiving the notice to quit. He is only entitled to cure an eviction once in any 12-month period.

If the tenant has a lease, he can stop the proceedings by paying the full amount of rent, plus interest and costs, by the Answer Day which is the first Monday before the hearing date.

A tenant with a lease can stop an eviction in this manner has many times as they wish during the lease period. The courts will not allow the tenant to "sign away" this protection in the lease.

There is no provision for a stay of execution and judgment in cases of non-payment regardless of the type of tenancy.

SERVING THE NOTICE

In both types of evictions, the procedures are the same. The landlord must prepare three copies of the notice: one is served on the tenant, one is filed with the court and one is for the landlord's files.

The time periods do not begin to run until the tenant receives the notice. Although the notice can be served any way the landlord wishes, he may have to prove the tenant actually received. Lawyers specializing in landlord-tenant law suggest using one of the following methods of service:

- Have a sheriff serve it.
- The landlord or his agent serve it, but have an adult witness present.
- Send the notice by Certified Mail/Return Receipt Requested.

Although the landlord can have the notice left at the tenant's address, most lawyers recommend that the notice be given directly to the tenant.

SUMMARY PROCESS SUMMONS AND COMPLAINT

After the notice time elapses, the tenant becomes a tenant at sufferance. The next steps involve the local District Court.

The landlord takes the copy of the notice with the statement of date and time of service on it to the court clerk's office and requests three copies of a Summary Process Summons and Complaint form. After the landlord fills out the form, the clerk will assign a hearing date.

The summons must be served on the tenant by a constable or sheriff.

The summons must be served on the tenant at least seven days, but not more than 30 days, before the Filing Date . This is the date by which the landlord must return the original copy of the Summons to the court. Failure to meet this deadline could cause the eviction to be dismissed. The landlord must also pay a filing fee at this time.

The Answer Day is the first Monday before the Hearing Day. This is the date by which the tenant must file an answer to the landlord's complaints if he wishes to appear or contest the action.

There are a number of defenses a tenant can raise to prevent the eviction from being granted. There are also a number of procedures the parties can use to find out what the other side is planning.

It is also important to note that a landlord cannot lock out a tenant, turn off any utilities or forcibly evict a tenant until the court issues a writ of execution.

The laws surrounding eviction are stringent to protect both landlords and tenants. Additonal information is available from private attorneys, legal services offices and housing organizations.

This is another point at which legal advice is suggested.

Hearing Day is the day the case is heard in court. Both sides have the opportunity to present facts, witnesses and defend themselves.

The tenant may also ask for a stay of execution if the eviction does not involve non-payment of rent. The tenant must show that he has made a good faith effort to find housing and that there is some hardship that makes it difficult to move at once.

JUDGMENT AND EXECUTION

After the judge has heard the case, a decision will be made. The parties receive the decision by mail shortly after the hearing date.

Ten days after the judgment has been entered, the execution issues. During the ten day period, either party can appeal the judgment to a higher court.

Assuming the eviction has been granted, a writ of execution is issued. The landlord can hire a sheriff to come with movers and immediately move the tenant out.

The law is unclear whether an owner must hire movers and place the tenant's belongings in a bonded warehouse. If the landlord does not, he may be vulnerable to a lawsuit for any loss or damage to a tenant's property.

Historical Society opens new gift shop

This summer, as part of its summer museum program the Cohasset Historical Society has opened a Museum Shop at its Capt. John Wilson Historical House at Cohasset Center.

The Wilson House Committee will operate the shop, which specializes in unusual and unique items relating to the history of Cohasset. Included among items offered in the show are the two volumes of the town history, Narrative History of the Town of Cohasset, Massachusetts, volume 1 dating from 1898, written by Rev. E. Victor Bigelow and now available in a special reprint made by the Historical Society, and volume 2, written by Burtram Pratt in 1956. Both volumes of Narrative History were first issued by Cohasset's Committee On Town History. Another reprint of a unique Cohasset book available at the Capt. Wilson House museum shop is E. Pomeroy Collier's 1909 Cohasset's Deep Sea Captains, a paperback edition containing short biographies of more than fifty 19th century Shipmasters from the town.

New this year and a featured item at the Society's shop is Cohasseter Barbara Conte's Cohasset Coloring Book. The history of this New England seacoast village is shown in a series of drawings suitable for coloring, with captions. Miss Conte has captured the three centuries of Cohasset's history in a highly entertaining and informative book well adapted to children and adults alike. Cohasset Coloring Book is a unique primer to the history of Cohasset,. with illustrations and captions by the author.

Also available at the Capt. Wilson House Museum Shop are the Society's Pairpoint Glass cup plates showing Minot's Ledge Lighthouse. These handmade recreations of an early 19th century artform are available in several colors and are of interest to collectors of decorative glassware.

Cohasset historian Gilbert S. Tower produced a set of historical maps of the town, compiling information from authoritative sources including early maps, atlases and town records. By special arrangement with his daughter. Frances Tower Maroni reprints of the Gilbert Tower historical maps are available through the Society's museum shop. Containing a wealth of historical information these large-sized drawings are an invaluable source record .

These and a number of other interesting items relating to Cohasset's past can be viewed and obtained at the Historical Society's new shop located in the Capt. John Wilson Historical House on Elm Street at the village. The Society's two museums; the Capt. Wilson House and the adjacent Maritime Museum now are open each afternoon except Mondays from 1:30 to 4:30. The Historical Society's phone is 383-6930.

NERVES AND VITALITY

While the word "chiropractic" is nearly synonymous with "bones" in the mind of the general public, the chiropractor's main concern is with the nervous system. The bones that make up the spine comprise the chiropractor's avenue of approach to the nerves which are encased in them. Through small openings in the spine, the nerves branch out to reach virtually every part of the body. Since (as GRAY'S ANATOMY says) "the nervous system controls and coordinates all the functions in the body," it holds the key to maintaining the body's proper function. It is the chiropractor's role to help maintain health by ensuring that the nerves are not compromised in their effort. If vertebral misalignment results in restricted nerve flow, the chiropractor seeks to correct it with an adjustment. His main concern is for free flow of vital nerve energy.

Deer Hill quiz kids win a cable audience

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

The stress of a TV quiz show is nothing strange to the students of Deer Hill's sixth grade.

They've been working on their very own quiz show on cable over the past few months.

Deb Duggan, community coordinator for Continental Cablevision, trained the students in television techniques and production.

Each of the classes took its turn taking complete responsibility for a show.

"It started with the news show Mrs. (Elizabeth) Cisneros room produced," Duggan said.

"The class just had so much fun this year doing the news show that the other classes wanted to get in on it."

And so what started as an annual event for Mrs. Cernos class – the News Show – expanded into an experience that all the new Deer Hill graduates share.

The last of the series of shows was taped at the North Scituate cable studio not long ago.

Duggan ran a special showing for the Mariner complete with explanations about the skills of the students.

Lest anyone wonder, Duggan has high regard for the students.

"At the start, I explain to them that they are working with some very expensive equipment and they have to be careful. There's no food allowed in the studio or in the control room," she said.

It's safe to reveal that Joseph Becker's class won the on-camera contest during the show.

But in reality all the students won.

The students handled the actual quiz show taping in one morning, but the work had been carefully prepared well in advance.

Quiz show questions were actually developed by the grade 6 teachers. Questions ranged from simple math problems to the names of book authors and astronomy.

So how many people know the name of the smallest planet or the location of the Eiffel Tower or the reason for the American Revolution? Well, the students in grade 6 could handle all that.

They produced a show that reflected their view of a quiz show. There was a catchy theme song, credits on the screen, signs for the scoreboard – even a buzzer, all made by students in grade 6.

The buzzer was a science project, Duggan said.

Applause during the show was not canned. It came from the rest of the grade 6 students who crowded into the studio to watch the production.

The on-camera team from Nancy Magnessen's room included: Tracy Mason, Andrea Mercurio, Brian Thompson and Deva Noonan.

On-camera from Cisneros room were: Christine Burns, Tafana Fiore, Andy Collin and Rory Winters.

Becker's on-camera contestants were: Lily Faulhaber, Kevin Gentile, Jared Hardwick and Simeon Ketchum.

Lawrence Shultz's quiz kids were: Brian Riley, Brian Sasso, Benita Johnson and Joanna Larrabee.

The skill and knowledge of all the teams was evident in the tape.

Caroline deLima, Jessica Sullivan Michael Kohlmeyer and Greg Stevens all learned about operating television cameras. Meredith Equi learned sound.

Jason Sullivan learned how to host a quiz show. Katie Medinger handled similar duties. Breezy Crosman was technical director.

Time keepers were David Hansen and Todd Harrington. Light judge was Ed Taylor. Narrator was Nicole Peterson. Stephie Lubitz provided technical help as did Greg Stevens and Jessica Hurley

Melissa Weier and Jessi Flynn kept score.

Sixth graders Steffie Lubitz, Lily Faulhaber, Breezy Crossman and Danielle Nohe work behind the control board at Deer Hill School.

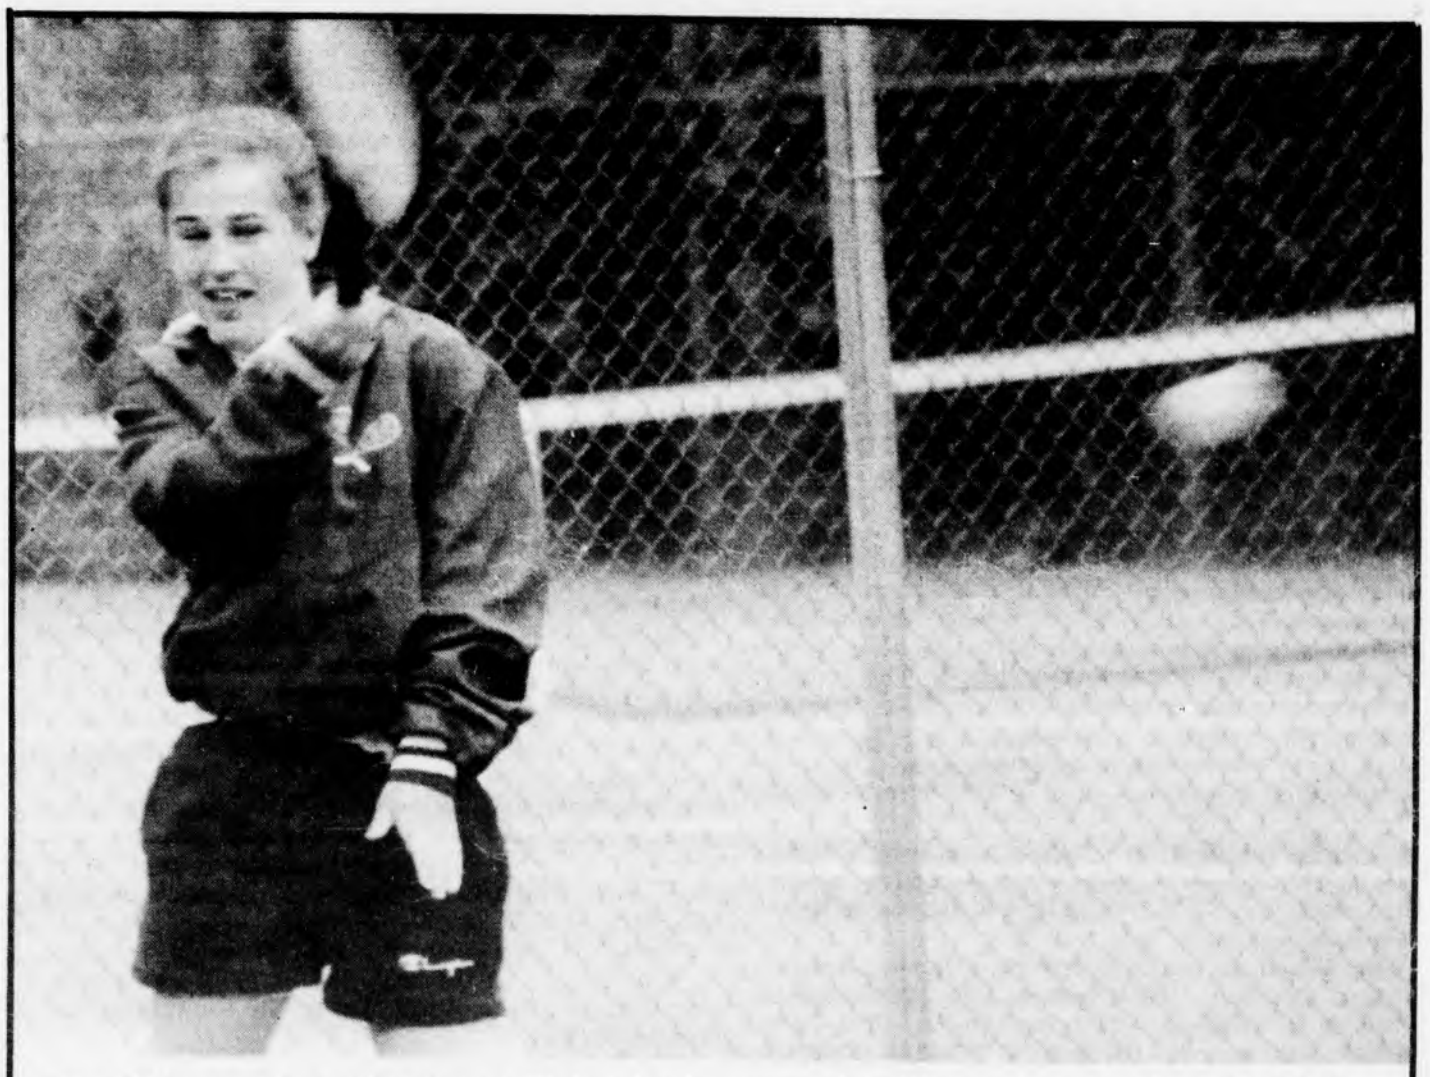
Skippers post 8-4 record

The Cohasset Skippers Boys Tennis team has had a great season this year. The Skippers posted an 8-4 record, while coming in second in the South Shore Small Division, behind Norwell. However, the team's success might have been a surprise to some.

The Skippers weren't overly optimistic after a mediocre 1989 season, only posting a .500 record.

Add to this the fact that the Skippers' former number two player, Joel Reidy, was sidelined for the season with a hockey injury, and the 1990 season looked extremely uncertain.



The team got off to a shaky start, losing their first three games, but after that the Skippers took off.

An adjustment in the doubles teams, placing John and Tim Brister together at 1st doubles and Michael Cisneros and Dan DeMichael at 2nd doubles, helped the Skippers to win eight out of their next nine matches.

The Skippers had a great coach, Eddie Amaral, who, along with co-captains Pat Milligan and Frank Willshire, gave strong leadership to the team, which was essential since the Skippers are such a young team (only one team member Frank Willshire, is graduating this year).

The Cohasset Skippers have had great team spirit throughout the year, and are optimistic going into the state tournament. Above all, the Cohasset Boys Tennis team is looking forward to having very good teams in the future.

The team includes: Pat Milligan, Frank Willshire, Caleb Slotnick, John Brister, Tim Brister, Michael Cisneros, Dan DeMichael, Pat Suhrbier, Bill Jordan, and Doug Drysdale.

UNIVERSAL HEALTH CARE EMPLOYER MANDATES: A THING OF THE PAST?
CONTACT YOUR SENATOR!

The House of Representatives has passed two amendments dealing favorably with the two employer mandates which fall under the Universal Health Care Law.

The first, sponsored by Representatives Peter Forman, (R) Plymouth, calls for the outright repeal of the two mandates for which employers are responsible. The first mandate currently in existence states that employers must pay $16.80 per employee to fund the yet to be established unemployed/uninsured state pool. The second mandate requires that employers provide their employees with $1,680 worth of health insurance benefits by January 1, 1992 or be forced to pay into a state pool for the same amount.

The second amendment, sponsored by Representative Emmet Hayes, (D) Whitman, would delay the implementation of the two mandates for two years. This would allow a new Governor and administration the opportunity to decide whether this program is economically feasible. The strategy is that delay has a better chance than repeal of passing the Senate.

Representatives' Forman and Hayes are to be commended for their efforts on behalf of the Chamber and business community.

Chamber members are urged to ask their Senators to support a two-year delay of the implementation of both employer mandates under the Universal Health Care Law.

The Senators names are as follows: Senator Michael Creedon - (D) Brockton, 722-1200; Senator William B. Golden - (D) Weymouth, 722-1646; Senator Paul Harold - (D) Quincy, 722-1494; Senator William Keating - (D) Sharon, 722-1222; Senator Edward Kirby - (D) Whitman, 722-1330; Senator Paul White - (D) Randolph, 722-1643.

WHAT WILL THE HOUSE & SENATE TAX PACKAGES MEAN TO YOU?

Both the House of Representatives and the Senate passed their own versions of tax bills to deal with the fiscal year 1990 budget deficit and the fiscal year 1991 budget.

The House of Representatives passed the following packages:

* THE PERSONAL INCOME TAX will be raised to 6.75 percent for the second half of calendar year 1990. Drops to 6.5 percent for calendar year 1991 and 6 percent in calendar year 1992.

* THE UNEARNED INCOME TAX will be raised from the current 10 percent to 12 percent. The tax on interest earned in Massachusetts based banks (under $100,000) will rise from 5 percent to 6.25 percent, both will be retroactive to January 1, 1990.

* THE GAS TAX will increase from the current 11 cents to 17 cents for the rest of calendar year 1990, and to 21 cents in calendar year 1991, a total increase of 10 cents.

* Would make permanent the "one-time" acceleration of corporate tax payments.

One week later, the Senate passed a tax package which would:

* Extend the 5 percent sales tax to include professional services and goods currently exempt. Including: Credit Reporting and Collecting, Direct Mail Advertising Services, Secretarial and Court Reporting Services, Commercial Photography, Commercial Art and Graphic Designing, Disinfecting and Pest Control Services, Building Cleaning and Maintenance Services, Personnel Supply Services, Computer Programming Services, Computer Integrated Systems Design, Computer Processing and Data Preparation and Processing Services, Information Retrieval Services, Computer Facilities Management Services, Computer Maintenance and Repair, Computer Related Services, Detective, Guard and Armored Car Service, Photofinishing Laboratories, Business Services, Legal Services, Engineering, Architectural and Surveying Services, Accounting, Auditing and Bookkeeping, Management, Consulting and Public Relations, and Financial Services.

• Lower sales tax on goods only to 4 percent until January 1, 1992.

• Increase the personal income tax from 5 percent to 5.5 percent effective January 1, 1991. The effective date for this increase was chosen to avoid the Citizens for Limited Taxation (C.L.T.) petition which would repeal any new taxes passed before this date.

• The unearned income tax would increase from 10 percent to 11 percent, again effective January 1, 1991.

• The gas tax would increase 6 cents in 1990 and 4 cents more in 1991 (same as the House version).

• 26 percent of state tax revenues plus $300 million in lottery revenues to cities and towns.

• 10 percent of state income tax and all new tax revenues will be placed in a trust fund from which local aid payments will be made.

• Some money from this trust fund will be used to finance deficit bondings. This appears to circumvent the C.L.T. repeal petition because it represents an agreement between the state and bondholders and uses revenue bonds rather than general obligation bonds.

Limits the five budget buster accounts to 37 percent of annual state spending (debt service, pensions, group insurance, state payments to the MBTA, and Medicaid).

The House and Senate must now meet in conference committee to resolve the differences in their respective tax packages. Once those differences are resolved, the House and Senate will vote on the final version of the tax package.

Over the past two months, the South Shore Chamber has offered two ideas for dealing with the fiscal year 1990 deficit and for the fiscal year 1991 budget:

We're continuing our push for bonding out the deficit and dedicating an existing tax, the surcharge of .5 percent on the 9.5 percent corporate excise tax to paying off that bond.

The surcharge on the corporate excise tax will generate an estimated $75-$100 million a year. Once the bond is paid off, revenues from the surcharge would be placed in a "Deficit Stabilization Fund" to pay off any deficit in that fiscal year. If the deficit is eliminated, any remaining balance would be transferred to a "Tax Reduction Fund" and used to reduce personal income taxes.

There are two potential benefits to this plan:

1. A healthy business climate will ensure a steady revenue stream to pay off the bond; therefore government policy toward business should reflect this relationship.

2. By dedicating an existing tax, this method of paying off the bond circumvents the Citizens for Limited Taxation Initiative Petition which would make null and void any new tax which may be dedicated to paying off the bond.

A LETTER from CONCERNED FACULTY of C.H.S.

The undersigned respectfully requests that you reconsider the proposed reductions in the Home Economics, Industrial Arts, and Business Departments. We feel that these departments should be maintained and run as full programs, which would allow all interested students to participate. We strongly believe that these areas of the Living Arts Program are necessary to the well being of this school system for the following reasons:

1. These departments teach valuable skills which help students determine their interests and abilities.
2. They provide occupational training and opportunities for student initiative.
3. They provide skills everyone needs for daily living.

We must also remember that a school's philosophy is a framework of basic principles of education that expresses a school's convictions. The philosophy of Cohasset Junior/Senior High School commits us to providing opportunities for meaningful education for those not choosing an academic course after high school and combining, for those students, a basic education with skills training. We are bound to give all students educational and occupational goals. Further, our philosophy "seeks to give survival skills needed for satisfactory personal and public experience." It challenges us to develop values and attitudes in our students which are present in self-confident and socially responsible adults. Specific objectives in our philosophy tell us that it is the responsibility of Cohasset Junior/Senior High School to provide programs for students with specific educational needs and to provide a program of physical and mental activities which will encourage life long participation in those activities.

Finally, the only recommendation of the visiting committee of 1982 was the following:

> Cohasset Junior/Senior High School should develop a program to provide more marketable skills for students not going on to further education.

If we slowly dismantle these "life-skills" departments, we will be moving away from the sole recommendation of the last accreditation team.

The faculty also notes the complementary nature of living arts to the specific following academic areas:

1. Home Economics and Industrial Arts have played an important role in the Grade 9 Humanities program.
2. The Living Arts have helped the Grade 7 Team realize a primary objective in providing the most productive day possible for our seventh graders.
3. The Living Arts have generously contributed time and effort to all school productions by providing costuming, sets, etc.
4. The Living Arts have been an integral part of the Senior Project Program.
5. The Living Arts have aided in providing learning experiences for our collaborative students.
6. Home Economics, Industrial Arts and Business Education have greatly aided the Special Needs teachers in creating an educational program for their students.

In summary, we ask you to realize that lessening the role of Industrial Arts and Home Economics in our total school program counters two of our most fundamental challenges; the development of self-discipline and responsibility in our students. Our primary goal must always be the preparation of youth for the responsibilities of life. The very nature of our school as a comprehensive institution will be in doubt. For the reasons above, we ask reconsideration of your proposals which will limit the accessibility of these vital programs to all students.

There will be three concerts this season one in June, July, and August.

Bring your own lawn chair or blanket to sit on.

Train your dog at classes

The recreation department will accept telephone registrations for Beginner and Intermediate Dog Training Classes to be taught by Laurie Cleveland. Classes will be held Wednesday evenings, on Cohasset Common, beginning Wednesday, July 11.

Beginner classes will be from 6 p.m to 7 p.m., and the intermediate/advanced class will be from 7 p.m. to 8 p.m., both on Wednesday evenings. The fee for the eight week program will be $30. Checks, made payable to the Town of Cohasset, may be brought to the first class. Participating dogs should be a minimum of three months of age. The purpose of beginner classes will be to teach novice pet owners basic obedience and responsible pet ownership. Subjects to be covered are proper use of voice corrections, stay commands, getting the dog to come, heel, etc. Helpful hints on ownership and responsibility will also be included. The training will include those exercises beneficial to the pet owner as well as those thinking about eventually showing their dogs in obedience. The intermediate/advanced class is designed for dogs that have completed the Recreation Department Beginner class.

For the above classes owners are required to have their dogs equipped with a humane choke chain. The proper size of the chain is determined by measuring the dog's neck and adding four inches. Absolutely no spike collars allowed. It is also strongly suggested that the handlers wear comfortable shoes and clothes for this session. For all classes: the fee is $30 per dog for the eight week, one hour per week program.

Baseball camps planned

The camp will be located at the Deer Hill School and will also play games at the Barnes Little League Field.

The South Shore Baseball Club Summer Camp will feature its usual excellent staff and facilities, assuring each camper a rewarding experience while enjoying our ever popular game.

Camp Director Frank Niles and his expert staff of qualified professionals will combine to make the South Shore Baseball Club Camp a valuable and worthwhile experience.

Individual attention will be emphasized in all aspects of the game. Pitching, catching, defense, baserunning and hitting will all be featured in special sessions. The staff will be sure to devote special attention to any individual needs or areas of improvement that a camper may have.

All campers will be grouped according to age, ability, physical maturity and previous experience. No previous baseball or softball experience is necessary. The instruction will range from basic fundamentals to advanced skills. Each camper will play a minimum of one game per day.

The price for the baseball camp will be $100, and the price for the softball camp will be $75. All campers will receive a hat and T-shirt.

Cohasset swimmer graduates in Arizona

Ann Henry, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. William Henry of 94 North Main St., graduated on May 30 from Dobson High School in Mesa, Arizona. Henry attended school in Cohasset through grade 7. She moved to Mesa in 1985 to swim on a national synchronized swimming team. She was an honor student at Dobson and received a scholastic diploma awarded for difficulty of courses taken in her three years at Dobson. One-fifth of the senior class of 816 students qualified for this diploma. She also received the Dobson Yearbook Honor given to the outstanding male and female senior for excellence in academics, sports and citizenship.

She swam on the speed swimming team for Dobson High School and qualified each year for the state meet. As a sophomore she was one of 10 girls who helped win the state Triple A title. She also won a medal her senior year for the 4 by 110 freestyle relay in the state championships at the University of Arizona.

Henry received the coaches trophy at the Dobson swimming banquet in her senior year and also won the coaches trophy in synchronized swimming last fall. In January of '90 she was awarded the Arizona state trophy for her high point total at the senior association synchronized swimming figure competition.

Swimming for the Arizona Aqua Stars team in Messa, she received her first U.S. Senior National medal in the team event in Tacoma, Washington in April. The meet was held at the new complex to be used for this summer's Goodwill Games. The 7th place medal was won by the A team of eight girls. This same team was chosen to represent the U.S. by the national organizing committee and will be leaving for Paris the end of June to participate in the French Open Synchronized Swimming Championships. This is one of the most competitive international competitions in the sport.

Henry will represent the United States in solo as well as in the team event. She will swim to Gershwin's "An American in Paris." The team will be accompanied by their head coach, Linda Lichter; who coached the olympic duet silver medalists, the Josephson twins, in Conn.; and her mother, Carol, who will attend as assistant coach and team manager.

Ann made the finals in solo at the Outdoor U.S. Jr. Nationals in San Diego last summer and made the finals in duet in Feb. of '90 at the Indoor U.S. Jr. Nationals held in Worcester. At this same meet, Henry and her seven teammates also won the silver medal in the team event.

After a great deal of consideration, Henry has decided to attend college and swim in Santa Clara, Calif. in the fall. The synchronized swimming team from Santa Clara placed first in team at this year's senior national championships.

FOR AN IDEA OF HOW DIRTY YOUR ORIENTAL RUG IS, RUB THIS AND LOOK AT YOUR FINGER.

Oriental rugs are constantly picking up various types of soil. Some are greasy and some are gritty. But they all can eat away at your treasured possession.

For your Oriental rug to retain its beauty and value, it should be cleaned at least once every three to five years.

At Grillo Oriental Rug Cleaning, we carefully examine each rug, then give it the most suitable treatment. Sometimes that means gentle machine-washing, other times it means our 'Art-Safe' hand-washing. And our exclusive equipment and methodology enable us to remove the deep-set grit that others miss.

Furthermore, unlike harsh commercial cleaning, our individualized, museum-quality care is always safe, always effective.

For more information, or to have your rug picked up, call (617) 871-6500. Outside this area code, call 1-800-649-7707.

The 'battling' Yanks will have to be reckoned with this year as they have depth in all positions.

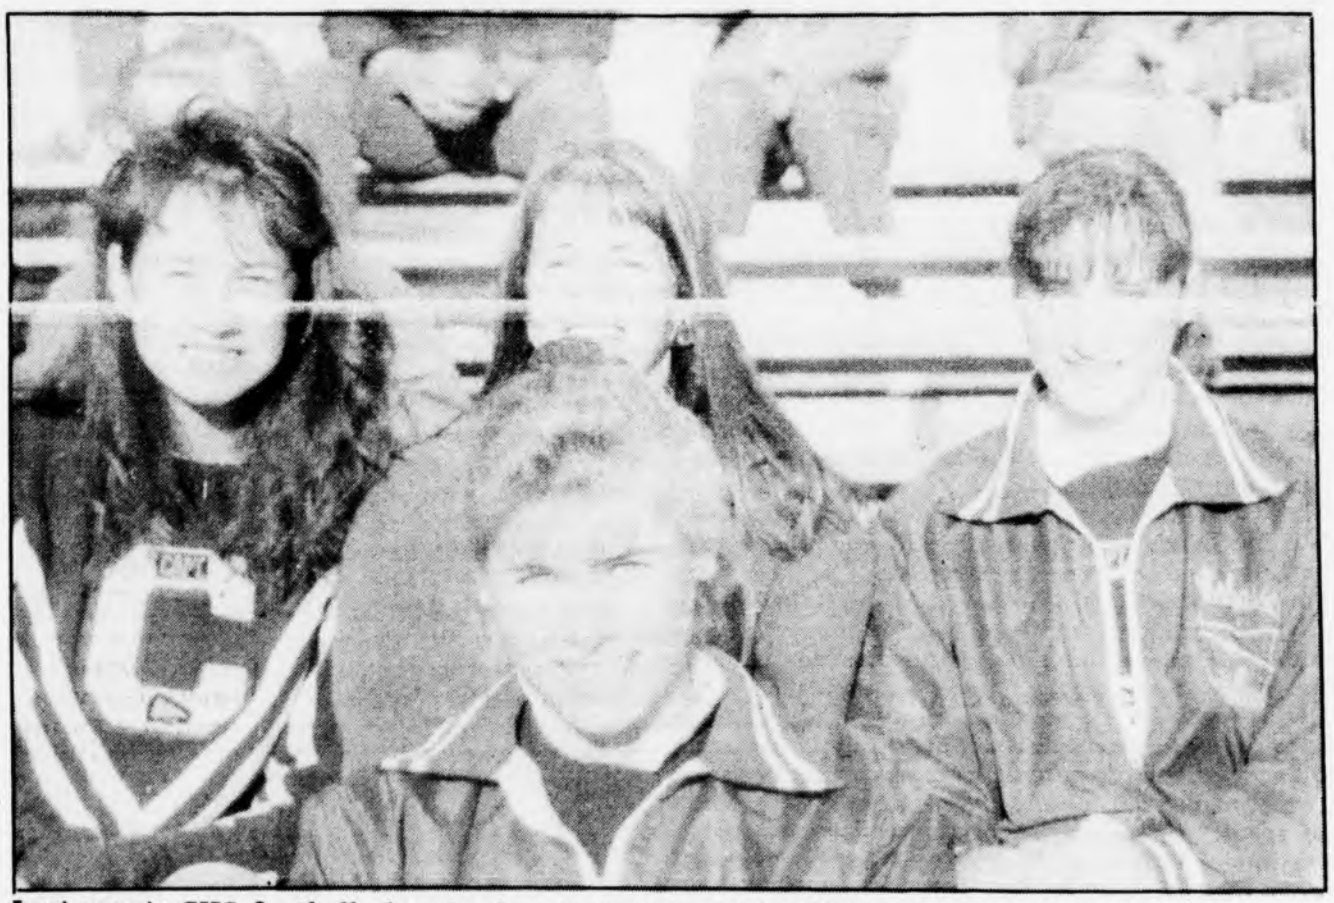
Craig Parker plays the left field power alley, Matt Pilczak is in right field. Stefan Vanderweil plays both shortstop and outfield as does Courtney Goff. The Yanks have a bright future as their success has been provided by an excellent defense.

PROFILE ON THE COHASSET MINOR LEAGUE (Leak Detection Systems) Red Sox

The Red Sox, under veteran coaches Brian Nohe and Bill Baird are the "hang tough" team within the 6 team 8/9 minor league division. The Red Sox have battled vigorously and are currently tied for second place within the six team minor league division. Rumors surrounding the team abound as they head into the final weeks of the season.

The Red Sox have found several young pitchers and figure to make a rush for first place. Playing outstanding ball for the Sox have been Greg Boyne, Kyle Bunstien, Eliot Noon, Ryan Story, James Nohe and Steve Maynard.

The Red Sox success has been due to their diligence on the field. They are improving with every game. Backboning the defense has been Alex Schwerin, Joe Carbone, Alexis and Nicholas Minicolla, Daniel Mulligan, Elizabeth Myers, and Mike Herzog.



Team attitude and persistence have also been a factor in the improving performance of the Red Sox. All the players have contributed both on the field and in the dugout to a positive team attitude this season.

PROFILE ON THE COHASSET FARM LEAGUE (Hancock Paint) Phillies

The farm Phillies are ripping up the league. Hitting for power has been Ethan Begley, Mario Bruzzone, Robin Cunningham and Sarah Kidder.

Playing outstanding defense have been Nicholas Bolster, Gregory Ernst, Brian Lewis and Matthew Meikleham.

Excellent base running has been provided by Jake Morgan, Lizzy Meyers and Elaine Smoot.

Last year's CHS football cheerleaders included: Carrie Ripley, captain; Ruthann Sargent, coach; Patty Tolini, captain, and Brooke Anderson.

The Phillies are ably coached by Kevin Lewis, Bob Morgan and John Smoot.

PROFILE ON THE COHASSET FARM LEAGUE (Christy's) ORIOLES

The powerful farm Orioles, coached by Dr. Steve Golden, Ken Ingber and Christy Mihos have exhibited offensive power and defensive balance. The Orioles are led by the versatile and talented Jerry Etienne. Jerry's skillful bat and glove have been the "talk of the league."

But the depth on the Orioles is also truly awesome. Speedy base running has been provided by Elizabeth Ingber, Taylor Strecker and Ashley Mihos. Chris Golden, Jay Bertovich and Chris Carr have been ripping the ball for the Orioles. Brothers Nicholas and Raymond Cavanagh have been playing tremendous infield, while Will Moody, Mickey Palone and Erik Shea have played a solid outfield.

The Board of Health voted unanimously at its meeting of June 12, 1990 that the following items are classified under the Mandatory Recycling Regulations for disposal at the Cedar Street Recycling Facility: boat and auto batteries, corrugated cardboard, glass, metal, newspapers, plastic, returnables, steel and tin cans, tires, used waste oil and yard waste.

COHASSET BOARD OF HEALTH

PUBLIC NOTICE TOWN OF COHASSET REVIEW FEE OUTSIDE CONSULTANTS APPELLATE RIGHTS

The Board of Health voted unanimously June 21, 1990 to amend the Cohasset Supplemental Regulations to 310 CMR 15.00 by deleting Section 20 (24) and adopting the following:

"The Board of Health (hereinafter the "Board") may determine that the assistance of outside consultants is warranted due to the size, scale or complexity of any proposed project under its review. In connection with the hiring of such consultants, the Board may require that the applicant pay a 'review fee' based upon the reasonable costs incurred or to be incurred by the Board for the employment of outside consultants engaged by the Board to assist in the review of an application.

In hiring outside consultants, the Board may engage engineers, planners, lawyers, urban designers or other appropriate professionals who can assist the Board in analyzing a project to insure compliance with all state, federal and municipal laws.

Funds deposited with the Board pursuant to this regulation shall be deposited with the Town Treasurer/Collector who shall establish a special account for this purpose. Expenditures from this special account may be made at the direction of the Board without further appropriation. Expenditures from this special account shall be made only in connection with the review of a specific project or projects from which a review fee has been or will be collected from the applicant. Failure of an applicant to pay a review fee shall be grounds for the denial of the application under consideration.

Review fees may only be spent for services rendered in connection with the specific project for which they were deposited. Accrued interest may also be spent for the same purpose. At the completion of the Board's review of a project, any excess amount in the special account relating to that project, including interest, shall be repaid to the applicant or the applicant successor in interest. A final report of the special account shall be made available to the applicant or the applicant successor in interest.

Any applicant may take an administrative appeal from the selection of an outside consultant to the Board of Selectmen. The grounds for such an appeal shall be limited to claims that the consultant selected is in a conflict of interest or does not possess the minimum required qualifications. The minimum qualifications shall consist either of an educational degree in, or related to, the field at issue or three or more years of practice in the field at issue or related field. The required time for action by the Board shall be extended by the duration of the administrative appeal. In the event that no decision is made by the Board of Selectmen within forty-five (45) days following the filing of the appeal, the selection made by the Board shall stand."

A management major, Grinnell was awarded a Bachelor of Science degree by President of the College William J. Farrell, who conferred bachelor's and associate's degrees on 570 students during the college's 119th Commencement.

Students win art awards

The following CHS student have won awards in the Patriot Ledger Art show. Mia Mansson, Cecilia Candia, Matt Silvia, J. Gaston, Brendan Kinchla, Marissa Gallant. Be sure to see their work at the Festival on the Common June 22-24.

Nussdorfer is lauded

Julie Marie Nussdorfer, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Nussdorfer of Cohasset, graduated from the Stoneleigh-Burnham School Class of 1990.

Nussdorfer received the Mathematics Prize, the Science Prize, the Judith M. Maxwell Memorial Award for Excellence in Combined Training, and was voted a member of the National Honor Society for her outstanding academic record.

Stoneleigh-Burnham is a college-preparatory school for girls in grades 9 to 12 and is located in Greenfield.

Talented youth

Almost 400 seventh-graders from Massachusetts were honored for their outstanding verbal and/or mathematical ability discovered in the 1990 annual talent search conducted by the Johns Hopkins University Center for the Advancement of Academically Talented Youth.

More than 46,000 students from over 4,000 schools in 19 states and the District of Columbia participated in the 1990 talent search. Approximately 23 percent of all talent search participants scored at or above the mean for the 1989 college-bound seniors on the mathematics portion of the test — 500 math — and about 16 percent scored at or above the verbal mean — 430 verbal.

Last fall, public and private schools in Massachusetts identified more than 1, 800 students who qualified for the talent search and took the SAT in January. Twenty-two percent of these students, who scored well above the mean for high school seniors, received certificates of merit in a ceremony on June 9 at Boston University.

The award recipients from Cohasset were: Candice Buckley, Katherine Cibelli, Jessica Connor, Jessica Jenkins and Dean Volungis.

Alyson James, a sophomore at Cohasset High School, is the student of the month.

Tegan Hamilton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H. Hamilton of Cohasset, received her diploma on Sunday, May 27 at the 111th commencement of Holderness School, Plymouth, New Hampshire.

During her three years at Holderness, she was a valued member of the school's alpine ski, varsity soccer and tennis teams. In addition, she was also involved with Blue Key, a student tour guide organization and participated in the school's winter musical her senior year.

Hamilton will continue her education at St. Lawrence University, Canton, N.Y.

School cuts hit home ec, and business

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

Samurai lore speaks of "the death of a thousand cuts." Madison Avenue might rename it "death on the installment plan." For the school committee, it is the incremental dismantling of a comprehensive high school education. Last week, they took another step in that direction by approving the appointment of professional staff and sealing the fate of the home economics, business and industrial arts programs.

Beginning in September, there will be only part-time staff for the three programs.

The committee heard a protest from the Cohasset Teachers Association about staff cut-backs. According to faculty members, the three departments provide training in essential life-skills needed by everyone.

The faculty made their point — in person and by an open letter printed in the media — that dismantling the departments also cut against the sole recommendation of the 1982 accreditation report.

The accreditation association's visiting committee said in its report, "Cohasset Junior/Senior High School should develop a program to provide more marketable skills for students not going on to further education." Reductions in the living skills departments throw "the very nature of our school as a comprehensive institution" into doubt, according to a letter prepared by the faculty members.

School committee member Nancy Sandell countered, "If we had our choice, none of this would be happening."

Fellow committee member Russell Reidy agreed, and added, "This is the result of financial cutbacks."

In an interview, Supt. Stephen Hart said the three departments were slated for reduction because of the combination of declining demand for the courses and failure of the Proposition 2 1/2 override.

"The total increase in our budget was 4.6 percent," Hart said. "Salary increases alone were 5 percent. You cannot maintain programs with inadequate funding." According to Hart, salaries account for 80 percent of the school budget. Fixed costs for utilities make up a sizable chunk of the balance.

Although the committee made reductions in industrial arts, home economics, business education and foreign languages at the secondary level, they added staff at the elementary level.

Hart said there has been a considerable increase at the elementary level requiring the addition of two second grade teachers and one permanent first grade teacher.

"Actually, we've seen an increase in population at all three schools," he said.

School system wants to be comprehensive

Every 10 years, Cohasset High School puts its reputation on the line. The last time the school faced an accreditation review by the New England Association of Secondary Schools and Colleges was 1982. The time is near for the next visitation.

Preparing for the accreditation review is no cakewalk. According to Supt. Stephen Hart, the school system goes through a two-year self-evaluation phase before the accreditation team visits.

During the self-evaluation process, the school revises its curriculum documents to match what is actually offered, prepares information about the school and community and writes a philosophy statement.

Last week, the committee that drafted the philosophy statement presented it to the school committee for their consideration. Previously, the philosophy was formally adopted by the faculty of the high school. The school committee will vote on the document at the first school committee meeting in July.

The team working on the philosophy statement consisted of faculty and administration members, students, the chairman of the school committee and representatives from the community. They worked through the school year to draft a philosophy statement reflecting Cohasset's ideas and ideals about education.

According to the philosophy committee chairman and director of student services, John Leary, it was a time-consuming job. Leary said the members took the task so seriously that every word had to be perfect.

Before even beginning to write a philosophy statement the committee reviewed the philosophy statements written for the previous two accreditations and read the statements developed by Hingham, Abington and Somerville. Additionally, the committee studied the educational goal statements of the Massachusetts department of education and Canada.

The committee used the goals and objectives prepared by the school committee as a guide, and

Church breaks additional ground

When September rolls around, Cohasset residents will notice something new around the old town common.

The Second Congregational Church is breaking ground for a new addition on July 1. Building committee chairman Hubert Vanderlugt is excited about the project because, he says, it will give "a good warm feeling" to the congregation's Sunday school children and teachers.

Vanderlugt said the congregation decided to renovate and expand the building not only because the congregation is growing.

"We want to have the best possible facilities for our children and make the space more appealing to the people who give their time and talents to the Sunday school."

According to Vanderlugt, the two-story addition will add a total of 2,000 square feet of space to the church. The addition will also house offices, the pastor's study and a chapel.

The new chapel will occupy one floor of the new addition. It will continue to be called Stanley Chapel, in honor of a former minister. Vanderlugt said every effort is being made to create a special atmosphere in the new chapel.

Other facets of the project include renovating and upgrading Bates Hall to make it more attractive to the church members and community groups who use it. The hall is popular with groups like the girl scouts, senior citizens, garden clubs and school groups. The church welcomes community groups to use the hall at no charge.

Although the original section, built in 1824, is not being altered, the contractor is adding a state-of-the-art sprinkler and fire alarm system.

"We feel we should do everything possible to make sure nothing happens to the church," Vanderlugt said.

From the outside, the new addition will blend in

Abatements add up despite the deadline

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

Abatement appeals applications continue to dribble into the assessors' office despite the June 7 deadline.

According to Chairman James Lagrotteria, some residents received extensions on the filing deadline from the state appellate tax board.

"Others may be just late. The tax board won't hear those," he said.

Because the assessors have no way of knowing who received extensions and who did not, they are accepting all applications.

Lagrotteria said he had no final count on the number of residents filing appeals, but his office staff said they have received 60 to 65 applications so far.

The assessors' office granted $97,000 in abatements, according to Lagrotteria. That number includes statutory abatements due to old age, disability, widowhood or a minor whose parents are deceased.

While most residents are requesting an appeal from a denial of an abatement, others are appealing the amount of an abatement that was

Mitchell to represent town

Selectmen unanimously appointed Laurence J. Mitchell of North Main Street to represent Cohasset on the South Shore Regional School District committee.

Selectman Jane Goedecke said Mitchell, who was the only resident to volunteer for the responsibility, is a graduate of the vo-tech school. Selectmen said they were pleased to have a graduate of the school representing the town.

Drug & alcohol committee

Selectmen named Elaine Burke Davis of Linden Drive and Susan M. Shumaker of Ledgewood Drive to the drug and alcohol committee and reappointed Keith Knowles.

According to Selectman Martha Gjesteby, the committee is planning a reorganization meeting soon. The group hopes to expand membership to include representatives from all segments of the community, including schools, churches and other organized groups.

Charges waived on maps

Jeff Waal, chairman of the conservation commission, asked selectmen to waive the $2.50 "revenue enhancer" the town charges on aerial topographical maps so the commission can buy a complete set at cost.

After being assured the maps would be used solely by the commission in the line of duty, the selectmen approved the request.

Waal said the general public would be directed to purchase their own maps at the going rate of $5.

There are about 60 maps in the set.

In other action, the selectmen unanimously reappointed John Bryant and Thomas Callahan to the conservation commission after telling Waal the selectmen had a policy of no accepting any more "automatic reappointments.

Regional members retire

The regional school committee Wednesday night accepted the resignations of members David Chittum and Stephen Farquhar.

Chittum, who represents Cohasset, has served on the committee for six years; Faraquhar represents Scituate and has served for three years.

At a small reception before the meeting the two gave similar reasons for retirement.

Chittum said he feels six years is enough time on the committee and he wants to let a fresh face take over.

He praised the staff at the school and was optimistic for the future.

"With the new building we are on the right track.

"I think the future is good for us, as long as we can keep the kids coming.

"It is an excellent school and I am very proud of it."

Farquhar said that he is stepping down to devote more time to his family and business.

He said that the challenge the school faces is to draw students from the public school system, but was optimistic the school would "play a more and more important role in the educational process."

The two were presented with plaques in recognition of their service.

Auction license granted

Selectmen granted an auction license to Dana Nickerson for an antique auction at the Route 3A Marketplace on July 18.

Nickerson is renting a side room for auctions at the flea market located in the old skating rink on the Hingham line.

Nickerson said the auction is a separate business fromthe flea market operation. He plans to old auctions of furniture and collectibles five or six times a year.

Selectmen were leery of granting a standing license and instructed Nickerson to come in at least a couple of weeks in advance of an auction in order to get his license.

Selectman Chairman Rocco Laugelle cautioned Nickerson to beware of people offering hot items for sale.

completely with the original building. Changes will be made to the annex built in 1964 to make it conform to the same architectural "look." Because the building is in the historic district, the building committee and the architect took special care with the exterior.

The church is also installing a brick patio and landscaping between the old town hall and the church building to make the outdoor area as attractive as possible.

The architect for the project is Cohasset resident Jim Shipsky. The construction contract was awarded to Parcon Inc. of Plymouth. Parcon plans to have the work completed within 90 days of breaking ground.

"We don't want to interrupt the Sunday school program that begins in mid-September," Vanderlugt said. "We're in a tight box for time."

Church services will continue in the sanctuary without interruption during the construction period.

Gjesteby discusses railroad plan

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

Selectman Martha Gjesteby came back to town last week with more information about regional planning.

Gjesteby spent time earlier this month at the National Association of Regional Councils conference in San Francisco where she was representing the Metropolitan Area Planning Council. The selectman is MAPC treasurer this year, having already served as secretary of the regional group.

Right after her return, she spent a day working on the MAPC's response to the plan for restoration of service on the Old Colony line.

Gjesteby is one of the town's two representatives to the Citizens Advisory Committee who have been working on the rail plan for the past four years.

Her own view on the train is qualified.

Gjesteby favors the restoration of commuter rail service on all three branches provided the financial details can be worked out.

For instance, Gjesteby said she doesn't understand why the projected cost for the railroad increased from $195 million to $561 million last year. She said the financial data available has been "thin."

She also wants to know more about plans for traffic control on Route 3A. Indeed she has a list of areas she wants the T to address.

"But I think it can be worked out," she said.

Anyway, while at the national conference, Gjesteby had a chance to hear ideas from Kevin Phillips, whom she described as an arch-conservative. Phillips addressed the conference on the politics of rich and poor. He talked about breaking the cycle of poverty by providing education and jobs.

Phillips, the keynote speaker, pointed out that the current economic problems in this country are a serious as the great Depression.

"The loss of the value of land in the Heartland was $300 billion," Gjesteby said as she went over her notes on the conference. "That's more than in the Depression. Our national debt buildup today is parallel to the Civil War."

She said he saw no change economically in 1990.

Issues of national concern have changed over the past few years. Housing is losing its priority as a top concern.

Gjesteby attributed the change to the fact that people are forming fewer households and housing prices are dropping accordingly.

Regional transportation was one of the conferences main issues with information about financing it offered.

One bit of information she came away with had to do with jobs and workers. Gjesteby said that the average worker now commutes 23 miles each way to work.

"We drive out of the city for the quality of life, individuals are concerned about the quality of life," she said. But the driving patterns are adding to the problems maintaining the quality of life.

"As a nation, we are over-malled," Gjesteby said looking over the notes she made while at the conference.

"There is 14,000 square feet of mall space for every person in this country. Can you believe those numbers?" she said.

She talked about the economics that was another high priority of the gathering.

She pointed out that the U.S. is the largest debtor nation — that we are the only country in the world to have a decreasing literacy rate.

No alternative found for Blue Cross

By Alison Cohen

If Blue Cross-Blue Shield dumps Cohasset, many employees could be left out in the cold.

According to Samuel Wakeman, chairman of the Insurance Advisory Committee, no alternative coverage has been found to replace Blue Cross. Wakeman also told selectmen he believed termination was inevitable.

Blue Cross threatened cancellation if less than 20 percent of town employees are enrolled in the health plan. Currently, only 13 percent are enrolled and Wakeman believed many of those employees will sign on with other health plans during the open enrollment period. when employees can switch health plans without penalties.

Wakeman also said Blue Cross was likely to raise rates substantially if the town staved off cancellation by enrolling enough employees in the program to satisfy the insurance company.

"It wouldn't be all that bad if Blue Cross cancelled, except for retirees," he said. Other programs could ease the burden on them as well. The hardest group to protect would be retirees living out of state.

Wakeman recommended the town write Blue Cross a formal letter stating their belief the town is entitled to a 60-day notice of intent to cancel at the close of the employee open enrollment period. After this time, the town would know whether 20 percent of the employees had opted into Blue Cross.

The question of when the notice clock begins to tick will be a major controversy. Blue Cross has implied that the 60 day period is already underway.

The only sure thing is that health insurance premiums will continue to rise. The result for employees could be devastating.

Selectman Ned Tebbets estimated that a town employee making $300 a week could bring home as little as $80 in his paycheck after taxes and insurance premiums were taken out.

"Who can afford it?" town employee Joe Laugelle asked. "We're all just trying to survive here."

Doing without health insurance isn't an option for most employees. Laugelle knows that first hand — his wife is dependent on oxygen.

Laugelle has been one of many employees on an advisory committee working on the health insurance dilemma. Wakeman applauded the advisory members for their input.

The town hopes to have a clearer picture of what the options are once employees declare their enrollment preferences.

Tebbets and Executive Secretary Greg Doyon will draft an enrollment form for employees to sign.

VoTech reveals long range plan

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

A long range plan for the newly consolidated South Shore Vocational Technical High School was approved Wednesday night by members of the regional school committee.

The plan outlines the staffing and curriculum changes necessary for the consolidation of the school into a renovated Hanover campus.

The $5 million project, expected to be completed by the fall of 1991, will add approximately 33,000 square feet to the existing campus.

Committee chairman Robert Mola, of Norwell, said the changes reflect results of a recent Chapter 74 evaluation made by the state in November.

Superintendent Clifford Easton said the long range plan calls for several programs to be either eliminated or consolidated.

He called the process a "wrenching experience." but necessary for future security.

"It is not unlike birthing a child. We are birthing a school; we are birthing a future.

"I want that birthing process to have a termination. I want to see the growth of the child. I want to see that child be the best it can be."

Paul Bourgea, who teaches packing machine mechanics at the school, complained his program, which will be eliminated, was not given a fair shake.

"I notice the machine shop had two years to improve or be eliminated.

"Why didn't we get that opportunity also?" he asked.

"We have as many students as some lower programs; our cost per student is the same as many lower programs."

Bourgea said his program has a high job placement rate of good paying jobs, and donations from industry total close to a quarter of a million dollars.

Programs facing no change are: automotive, auto body, drafting, electronics, HVAC and machine shop.

Culinary arts, graphic arts and marine technology would move to the Hanover campus.

The painting and wall finishing program will be eliminated and absorbed into the carpentry program.

Cosmetology will relocate to the Hanover campus and be dropped back to the 10th grade.

Support of METCO program reaffirmed

While several communities in the commonwealth are rethinking the level of their participation in the METCO program, last week the school committee reaffirmed Cohasset's commitment.

According to the committee and Supt. Stephen Hart, not only does METCO provide educational and social benefits for both METCO and non-METCO students, the program also produces a financial windfall for the school system.

"In addition to all the other benefits, METCO reimburses us for the education of the children. There are no direct costs to Cohasset for the METCO program," Hart said.

Additionally, he said, METCO supplies the salary of nearly two teachers.

"If the METCO program were not here, almost $50,000 would have to be picked up by the school system," Hart said.

The METCO discussion was kicked off by a report from recent graduate, Veronica DeVos, on her senior project. DeVos conducted an attitude survey on the METCO program with METCO students and parents.

DeVos found that all participants valued the educational opportunities in Cohasset, but wished for greater social interaction between students and their families. They recommended expanding the host family program sponsored by the Parent School Organization.

METCO students said it was impossible to compare the educational system in Cohasset with Boston public schools, except by reputation. Virtually every student interviewed had been enrolled in Cohasset schools since the first grade.

DeVos said she was gratified to learn that no METCO student had encountered overt racist attitudes or prejudice. Older male METCO students said there was a tendency toward stereotyping of the "black macho male with gold chains" variety.

DeVos said she was distressed to hear Osgood students in the first and second grade speak of "drugs, death, killing and shootings" as a part of their life away from Cohasset.

"It would be nice if they could be naive and innocent a little longer," she said.

Gjesteby discusses railroad plan

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

Selectman Martha Gjesteby came back to town last week with more information about regional planning.

Gjesteby spent time earlier this month at the National Association of Regional Councils conference in San Francisco where she was representing the Metropolitan Area Planning Council. The selectman is MAPC treasurer this year, having already served as secretary of the regional group.

Right after her return, she spent a day working on the MAPC's response to the plan for restoration of service on the Old Colony line.

Gjesteby is one of the town's two representatives to the Citizens Advisory Committee who have been working on the rail plan for the past four years.

Her own view on the train is qualified.

Gjesteby favors the restoration of commuter rail service on all three branches provided the financial details can be worked out.

For instance, Gjesteby said she doesn't understand why the projected cost for the railroad increased from $195 million to $561 million last year. She said the financial data available has been "thin."

She also wants to know more about plans for traffic control on Route 3A. Indeed she has a list of areas she wants the T to address.

"But I think it can be worked out," she said.

Anyway, while at the national conference, Gjesteby had a chance to hear ideas from Kevin Phillips, whom she described as an arch-conservative. Phillips addressed the conference on the politics of rich and poor. He talked about breaking the cycle of poverty by providing education and jobs.

Phillips, the keynote speaker, pointed out that the current economic problems in this country are a serious as the great Depression.

"The loss of the value of land in the Heartland was $300 billion," Gjesteby said as she went over her notes on the conference. "That's more than in the Depression. Our national debt buildup today is parallel to the Civil War."

She said he saw no change economically in 1990.

Issues of national concern have changed over the past few years. Housing is losing its priority as a top concern.

Gjesteby attributed the change to the fact that people are forming fewer households and housing prices are dropping accordingly.

Regional transportation was one of the conferences main issues with information about financing it offered.

One bit of information she came away with had to do with jobs and workers. Gjesteby said that the average worker now commutes 23 miles each way to work.

"We drive out of the city for the quality of life, individuals are concerned about the quality of life," she said. But the driving patterns are adding to the problems maintaining the quality of life.

"As a nation, we are over-malled," Gjesteby said looking over the notes she made while at the conference.

"There is 14,000 square feet of mall space for every person in this country. Can you believe those numbers?" she said.

She talked about the economics that was another high priority of the gathering.

She pointed out that the U.S. is the largest debtor nation — that we are the only country in the world to have a decreasing literacy rate.

No alternative found for Blue Cross

By Alison Cohen

According to Samuel Wakeman, chairman of the Insurance Advisory Committee, no alternative coverage has been found to replace Blue Cross. Wakeman also told selectmen he believed termination was inevitable.

Blue Cross threatened cancellation if less than 20 percent of town employees are enrolled in the health plan. Currently, only 13 percent are enrolled and Wakeman believed many of those employees will sign on with other health plans during the open enrollment period. when employees can switch health plans without penalties.

Wakeman also said Blue Cross was likely to raise rates substantially if the town staved off cancellation by enrolling enough employees in the program to satisfy the insurance company.

"It wouldn't be all that bad if Blue Cross cancelled, except for retirees," he said. Other programs could ease the burden on them as well. The hardest group to protect would be retirees living out of state.

Wakeman recommended the town write Blue Cross a formal letter stating their belief the town is entitled to a 60-day notice of intent to cancel at the close of the employee open enrollment period. After this time, the town would know whether 20 percent of the employees had opted into Blue Cross.

The question of when the notice clock begins to tick will be a major controversy. Blue Cross has implied that the 60 day period is already underway.

The only sure thing is that health insurance premiums will continue to rise. The result for employees could be devastating.

Selectman Ned Tebbets estimated that a town employee making $300 a week could bring home as little as $80 in his paycheck after taxes and insurance premiums were taken out.

"Who can afford it?" town employee Joe Laugelle asked. "We're all just trying to survive here."

Doing without health insurance isn't an option for most employees. Laugelle knows that first hand — his wife is dependent on oxygen.

Laugelle has been one of many employees on an advisory committee working on the health insurance dilemma. Wakeman applauded the advisory members for their input.

The town hopes to have a clearer picture of what the options are once employees declare their enrollment preferences.

Tebbets and Executive Secretary Greg Doyon will draft an enrollment form for employees to sign.

High school receives state funds

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

Cohasset high school students will be able to test their mettle on a ropes course next year thanks to a state-financed school improvement funds grant.

Jack Buckley, director of the alternative school, was one of several teachers who submitted a project grant. Because funds were severely limited this year, the Arts Boosters stepped in and filled the other requests.

According to Supt. Stephen Hart, this year Cohasset received $1,200 for improvement grants compared with $8,000 three years ago.

Buckley's project will allow the school to build a rope course that can be used inside the gym or in an outdoor setting. Principal Meg Gallagher said the course would be used indoors initially, although the alternative school students will try to identify and secure an appropriate outdoor site.

One of the challenges in finding an outdoor site is the need to keep the course safe from vandalism and unauthorized use.

The purpose of a ropes course is to build confidence and self-esteem while challenging participants to work cooperatively to solve problems posed by the course. The course is used as part of the Outward Bound other adventure/personal development programs.

Buckley was funded two years ago to go through the Outward Bound training and is fully certified as an instructor. Buckley will run the program outside of his teaching hours.

Gallagher said the program would be used with incoming seventh graders and peer counselors. Ultimately, they hope the program can be made available to the general public.

Selectmen study RR

After hearing a litany of faults and negative feelings, selectmen tabled a vote on the Old Colony Railroad and established a subcommittee to study the matter.

Members on the subcommittee are Ned Tebbets, Jane Goedecke and Martha Gjesteby. Gjesteby was part of a citizens advisory committee studying the railroad.

Major objections centered on the effect train traffic from the Greenbush line will have on the quality of life in Cohasset and the town's share of capital and operating costs.

Saying the Greenbush line will only relieve Route 3A of 1,500 vehicles out of the more than 30,000 on the road each day, Selectman Diana Kornet said, "I'd be more willing to support the railroad if it removed at least one-third of the traffic."

For Selectman Ned Tebbets, the railroad represents a huge financial gamble that Cohasset can ill-afford.

Jeff Waal, chairman of the conservation committee, said the committee would take no position until the railroad files a notice of intent.

Referring to people who want to stop Greenbush but support the other two lines, Selectman Jane Goedecke said it is not politically or economically possible to separate the three lines.

"The other towns believe that without the assessments and riders from the Greenbush, it just won't fly," Goedecke said.

She warned that almost every person who spoke at the Braintree hearing favored the railroad.

Selectmen appoint subcommittee to study septic problem

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

If Celtics' announcer Johnny Most was doing a play-by-play announcement on the Government Island duplex story, he'd say the selectmen were "fiddling and diddling" instead of driving to the basket. Rather than taking action to correct the failing septic system at the town-owned Government Island duplex, the selectmen appointed a subcommittee at their last meeting to study the problem.

Selectmen had applied to the advisory committee for a transfer of $6,275 from the reserve fund to make the septic system repairs. Advisory chairman Ray Kasperowicz came back to the selectmen saying the committee wondered if the town should be in the landlord business.

"The transfer would have been defeated if a vote had been taken" on the request, Kasperowicz told the selectmen. He said the advisory committee wanted to know the total cost of renovating the units before granting any transfers.

"Let's make it a valuable asset to the town," Kasperowicz said. "As it is, it's just a headache."

The subcommittee, consisting of Chairman Rocco Laugelle and Diana Kornet, will look into optional uses of both the duplex and Bates building, water usage at the duplex, numbers of tenants living in the units and a timeframe for action to be taken regarding rent payments at the duplex. Laugelle and Kornet will report back to the board at the July 9 meeting.

Under the emergency permit granted by the board of health for making the repairs, the work was to be completed within 30 days. The deadline has elapsed. The selectmen will need to get new permits from both the health board and the conservation commission.

Diana Kornet told Kasperowicz she opposed further delays in repairing the septic system.

"I plead with you to go back to the advisory committee and argue for fixing the septic system," she said. "It needs to be fixed. We mustn't stall it any longer.

"It was a decision of the health board that this really needs to be done. They have looked the other way while we have delayed."

Selectman Jane Goedecke suggested the subcommittee look at the value of the building with a failing system and the value of the building with a good, working system. She also urged that the delay not extend past the next meeting.

"It sets a poor example for the rest of town," Goedecke said.

Kasperowicz urged the selectmen to stay in touch with the advisory committee and reconfirm the need for the transfer or some lesser amount.

"Let's not just fall into a black hole that just leads to more surprise expenditures down the line," he said.

New school philosophy

was assisted by the active presence of the school committee chairman, Barbara Bliss, on the team.

Leary said the committee made two decisions at the outset to guide them in their deliberations. First, they agreed that Cohasset was committed to maintaining a comprehensive high school that exposed students to a variety of different learning experiences. Secondly, they wanted the opening statement to serve as an overview of Cohasset High School, its philosophy and vision of the role it plays in the lives of its students and in the community.

The balance of the document consists of the school's goals, with specific measurable objectives for attaining them, and a summary.

In preparing the statement, the committee broke into four subgroups, each responsible for writing its own version. The group came together to hammer out a final document representing a consensus agreement.

As currently written, the summary reads:

Cohasset High School's vision is to develop citizens who love to learn,
think clearly,
feel deeply,
act wisely,
share ideas,
cooperate with others,
work independently,
appreciate other cultures,
have basic skills.

Leary said the document contained elements from many philosophy statements, but also was unique to Cohasset.

Bliss said she was most impressed by the way the document focussed both on "always reaching for the stars," and yet was always very student-oriented.

Bliss emphasized that the committee "really tried to make the document say exactly what they meant." She was impressed by their ability to do so succinctly.

Another member of the committee told the school committee that although it is hard for educators to avoid using educational jargon, they worked to develop a philosophy that students could read and understand.

School committee member Dr. Christopher Ford said he didn't sense the stated depth of commitment to a comprehensive education at Cohasset High School.

"Are we comprehensive if we only have one-half of a home economics teacher and one-half of a shop teacher?" Ford asked.

Ralph Kidder suggested that the seriousness of the document warranted serious consideration by the committee. Kidder said he did not feel ready to vote on the document.

Saying he'd only had the document for 24 hours, he continued, "it deserves a lot more respect than that."

Although Leary warned the school committee that any changes would result in the process beginning over again, the committee decided wait until the next meeting to vote on it.

At the conclusion, Bliss said she would like to see a philosophy statement prepared for each of the elementary schools as well.

"It does bring a focus to what's going on in the building," she said.

❑As you are driving down (or up) South Main Street, be sure to notice the special plantings in the islands in front of St. Anthony's Church! Joe Sestito, Anthony Sestito, Bob Ripley and Bumpy Carl Sestito are the artists that did the planting, and we all thank these gents for their time and efforts on the town's behalf. It sure looks grand!!

❑Last weekend Ronnie, Brad and Ruthie Goodwin all got together and held a surprise 50th wedding anniversary party for their Mom and Dad, Ruth and Harry Goodwin. It was a luncheon held at Kimball's, with all of the Goodwin's friends in attendance to help them celebrate. Everyone had a wonderful time, and Kimball's did their usual great job!

❑This weekend it was George and Arlene Orr's turn to be surprised, when their children, Nancy, Douglas, and Sue Ellen all got together to put on a surprise 50th for their folks! Friends and relatives all gathered at the Orr homestead, where there was a nice celebration and surprise! 50 years is certainly a long time, and we congratulate both couples!

❑The students at the Osgood School weren't as happy as usual to see the school year end this spring, as it also meant they wouldn't have Mr. Creamer as their principal any longer. For the past 18 years Jack has been "at the helm there, and he will be missed by students and their parents alike. We sure want to wish him well in his retirement!!

❑Congratulations go to Lisa Ferreira, daughter of Arlene and Bob Ferreira of Beechwood Street, on her engagement to Richard Evans, son of Frank and Ann Evans of Airoaks Lane. They will be married in December. Arlene and Bob's daughter Kim is to be married on August 26 this year! Can you imagine how busy that household is? Best wishes to all of you.

❑Congratulations go to William Baird this week, he has been selected from hundreds of student athletes across the state to be interviewed as a semi-finalist in the Bank of Boston/Bay State Games "Lead By Example" scholarship program. There will be eight winners from four regional semi-finalists interviews, and they will share $20,000 in scholarship awards. The names will be selected at the games opening ceremony, held on July 20 at Boston College. Good luck to you William, we are all cheering for you!

❑The Cohasset Swim Center is under full swing now, so it is up to you to be careful as you drive both on North Main Street and Sohier Street! There are lots of kiddos taking advantage of the swimming and the lessons, so be on the watch for them as you are on the roads.

❑Hats off to our senior citizens, who helped the Rotary Club distribute their telephone books that we all love so much. Why not help the Rotary too, by using the enclosed envelope to mail a donation to their scholarship fund?That is their main fund-raiser, and they certainly do a lot for our graduates every year...

❑Congratulations go to Alyson James who was the student of the month at Cohasset High School for the final month of the school year!

❑Hats off to Chris Rifkin, who was the chairman of the Arts Festival last weekend. Everyone was talking about how wonderful it was. The weather was perfect, the craft vendors, artists, entertainers, the Cohasset Drama Club, the Community Garden Club all put in their efforts to make the festival a rousing success. Even Mother Nature smiled on the event. Chris, who is also the President of the Art Center, must be thrilled with the results, and rightfully so!

❑Carla James, granddaughter of Bob James, graduated from Simmons College recently, where she earned her Masters degree in social work. Carla is the daughter of Phil and Cindy James, who reside in Connecticut.

❑We sincerely hope that whoever "borrowed" Mike Gill's baseball cards has returned them to him by now If not, please do!

❑Finally, don't forget to purchase your Sandy Beach sticker! The stickers are on sale through July 14 at the town hall from Monday through Thursday from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., Thursdays from 5 to 7 p.m. and Friday and Saturday from 9 .m. to noon. Stickers will cost you $7 per car, with senior citizens paying $3.

❑That's the news from here, please call me with your tidbits. That is what makes this column fun to read for all!!

Chart House faces parking crunch

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

The owners of the new Chart House restaurant created an interior with spectacular views and special appointments, but they're stymied by the parking lot.

"Everyone says you better do something about the parking and traffic problem," Chart House manager John Hankinson said.

When the Chart House opens in early August, dinner reservations and a computer-assisted valet parking system should relieve some of the parking woes. The new restaurant is also de-emphasizing the lounge business so there should be a faster turnover in the lot, but the owners are still seeking solutions.

According to Hankinson, the restaurant's seating capacity is 325 people, but the parking lot only holds 80 cars. Even with optimum turnover, the restaurant is still 30 to 40 spaces shy.

"We're asking for your advice and guidelines to alleviate problems before they begin," Hankinson told the selectmen.

Chairman Rocco Laugelle suggested he take the issue up with the police chief and the safety officer. Hankinson they were the ones who referred him to the selectmen.

One possible solution he raised was using Government Island for overflow parking. Selectmen advised him to file for a request, but didn't hold out much hope.

Hankinson was warned that the neighbors on Parker Avenue frequently complain about noise in the Government Island parking lot at night.

"They're not likely to support regular use of Government Island for parking," he was told.

Hankinson also told the selectmen the tentative date for opening was August 2. He apologized for the delay, but said once they saw the interior they'd understand why it's taking so long.

"We kept the few, everything else is new," Hankinson said.

The Chart House will not be open for lunches. During the week, dinner will be served between 5 and 10 p.m. On weekends the hours are 5-11 p.m. The lounge is open one hour later.

During the day, the restaurant is available for functions. Hankinson said five weddings have been booked already.

Hankinson has been interviewing people for jobs at the restaurant. So far, 1,100 people have applied for the 175 openings.

"We've met a lot of the people of Cohasset and Scituate," he joked. "We could open four restaurants with the staff we've interviewed so far."

The selectmen also approved Hankinson's appointment as manager for licensing purposes.

A fine show of art

The South Shore Art Center's annual show was everything we have come to expect — the tents were filled with fine artwork, the Common was filled with fun and the streets of the Village were filled with interesting people who happen to enjoy art.

The Best in Show award went of Becky Haletky for her fascinating acrylic painting called "Elysian Fields." The work was definitely eye-catching with its bright, almost-neon colors and boxy lines. The painting, basically a diner scene, was a standout.

The program listed the comments of the three judges above the catalogue of exhibits.

"Technically of very high quality but within a limited range of concept," said Dan Kelleher.

"The quality of the work is technically fine. The design is much neglected. I wish all painters and printmakers realized how much better their work would look if it were matted on white or off-white and framed simply," said Helen Citron Boodman.

"This is not a 'risky' show. The work is of high quality technically. More concern should be given to formal abstract qualities even in realism," said Norma Yalovitz-Blankenship.

Well, we have to agree that the work was technically wonderful.

We happen to think the range of artists included in the show was wide. The artists took successful risks. And the artists included in the members' show as well as in the main show proved their good taste in the way they matted and framed.

We only wish the main show had more space available — all the better to display more fine art.

Think over the 4th

Next week Cohasset and the rest of the country will celebrate the birth of the United States.

It's a time to party with friends and relatives — a time to enjoy backyard barbecues and other traditional pleasures.

The Greek Taverna will offer its ethnic fare on Jeru-salem Road. The beaches will be filled. The Harbor will teem with activity.

Government agencies will issue safety warnings because too many of us get carried away over the holiday.

Business stands still for the Fourth of July.

Sometimes we all forget the work that goes into our traditions.

Just like sometimes we forget that this country was formed because a group of men were willing to fight a war for their principles.

Yes, our freedom grew because the patriots of the Revolutionary War believed it was preferable to kill and be killed than to live under tyranny.

The colonists fought their battles over the level of taxation.

Ever wonder what they would have thought about Nelson Mandela and his fight for simple dignity?

Some residents favor railroad

Letters

To the Editor:

Your columnist, Patricia Desmond, should be complimented for pointing out to readers that there are a considerable number of Cohasset citizens in favor of the railroad's return to Cohasset.

In answer to queries from concerned individuals, the Old Colony executives have informed me that:

1. There will be not one cent more impaction on Cohasset's tax rate when service begins, as since 1983 new services have been exempt from the MBTA local assessment formula.

2. No train will leave Cohasset until the Neponset bridge is reconstructed — so passengers will be able to ride straight to the South Station. No changes en route will be necessary.

3. All rails will be welded, as in Europe, in the interests of a smoother ride for passengers, and more quietness for those along the right of way.

4. Currently, a 96 percent on-time schedule pertains to the 59 towns served west and north of Boston.

With best wishes.
Edward F. Woods, D.M.D.

Renaissance Committee says thanks

To the Editor:

The Village Renaissance Committee wishes to thank the many people who have brought new vitality to Cohasset's downtown area.

A special thanks to Cohasset resident Virginia Ferenz for all her work in obtaining, and in many cases planting, the flowers that adorn the storefronts in the village. Our thanks, too, to the merchants and businesses that bought the flowers or made donations to Village Renaissance. The proceeds made possible the purchase of paints for the beautiful "Public Garden" mural that brightens the empty lot near the old Central Market.

This mural was the creation of high school art teacher Colleen Lucas and twenty-four of her students. We are grateful to all of these talented artists for their contribution to the town. We also thank the Cohasset School Administration and Pilgrim Cooperative Bank for their support of this project.

We hope that these efforts will draw more people into the village to enjoy the shops and services of historic downtown Cohasset.

Sincerely yours,
Jacqueline Dormitzer,
Volunteer Coordinator
Cohasset Village Renaissance

School early release days increased

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

The school committee approved an increase in the number of early release days next year. Elementary school students will get out of school early on 17 days, while junior and senior high school students will be dismissed early on 13 days.

One reason for the increased number of early release days is to allow Cohasset to participate in joint staff training programs with Scituate and Hull. Four regional inservice programs are planned.

According to Supt. Stephen Hart, the increase in the number of staff training sessions has been a priority of teachers.

"Teachers want to get better at their jobs, to grow at it, but that takes time," Hart said.

Training sessions have been scheduled around learning styles, cooperative learning experiences, on the diagnosis and remediation of learning problems in mathematics and curriculum development by discipline area.

Other early release days will be used for parent-teacher conferences, budget preparations and student placement conferences.

"The message I hope comes across is that . . . professional development is important," Hart said.

Chamber of Commerce studies rail proposal

The Board of Directors of South Shore Chamber of Commerce, in a special meeting of its Board of Directors on June 20, has voted unanimously to reiterate its previous support for restoration of Old Colony Rail Service on the Middleboro and Plymouth rail lines. Commented Forrest R. Cook, Jr., President of South Shore Bank and 1990 Chamber President, "I give a lot of credit to the Old Colony Rail Task Force for doing its homework in examining all of the ramifications of restoration on the Greenbush line. The Task Force has met for almost two years and has looked at many specific issues related directly to restoration on the Greenbush issue."

In past years, the Chamber of Commerce Board of Directors has endorsed the restoration of commuter rail service on the Middleboro and Plymouth lines, and has supported the construction of a new Neponset River Bridge. The Chamber has also voiced opposition to the use of Braintree as a Transfer Alternative.

During the same special meeting of the Board of Directors, a majority of the Board of Directors voted to table the question of taking a position on Greenbush Restoration for an indefinite period of time. The action was taken so that further information could be developed by the MBTA on such important questions as: at-grade crossing impacts, impacts to business, impacts on local traffic, ridership projections, impacts on commuter boats, impacts on buses, costs for construction, and operation and revenues in light of current state financial conditions.

The Chamber Board of Directors did adopt a consensus statement, which was presented by its own Old Colony Rail Task Force. The Task Force was created in August of 1988 and was made up of Chamber members, local political leaders, and resident activists. Those members of the Task Force included: Stephen Ricciardi, Thomas Galvin, Mary Kerr, Brian McDonald, Richard Cook, Warren Noble, Peg Goudy, Stanley Elkerton, Dwight Conant, and was chaired by Ralph Rivkind.

The consensus statement, adopted by the Board unanimously, states:

The Old Colony Rail Task Force was formed in August of 1988. It was designed to specifically look at the issues surrounding the proposed restoration of Commuter Rail Service on the Greenbush line. The Old Colony Rail Task Force was not formed to look at the issues surrounding the restoration of commuter rail service on either of the Middleboro or Plymouth lines The Board of Directors of South Shore Chamber has already endorsed those two lines from their terminus points to Boston. The Board support also includes the construction of a new commuter rail bridge over the Neponset River to be used for commuter rail.

The Old Colony Rail Task Force is a coalition of South Shore Chamber of Commerce Board of Directors members and community and political activists. In its makeup, the Chamber has strived to have equal numbers of people serving on the Task Force representing both sides of the issue. The Task Force has met a number of times and has looked at a number of issues. The issues have included, but not been limited to, demographics of a changing South Shore, commuter rail versus boats and buses, political opposition to the line, and costs associated with restoration.

The Old Colony Rail Task Force agrees:

1. There is a commuting problem on the South Shore.
2. A large segment of the South Shore population will continue to commute into and out of Boston on a daily basis
3. Unless other commuting opportunities are available this trend will cause increasing traffic congestion during peak hours of the morning and evening.
4. The South Shore will continue to expand on its own, regardless of development taking place in Boston.
5. Doing nothing for the Greenbush area, rail or otherwise, is not a viable alternative to solving our long-term transportation needs.
6. The City of Quincy, the towns of Braintree, Weymouth, Hingham, Cohasset, Scituate, and other surrounding towns, deserve an improved transportation network to serve their expanding commuter population.
7. It is advantageous for commuters to have many pickup points.
8. People will drive short distances to get transit service, if they do not have to transfer to any other mass transit service.
9. There should be a continuing emphasis on providing an inter-modal mix of transportation alternatives for commuters.
10. All transportation needs must receive increased financial support from state and local governments, and that money should not be lost to highways because of commuter rail.
11. Funding of the project is an issue of critical concern, both from a state and federal commitment and from a local and commuter commitment.
12. Fare box recovery should be within the range of national norms, but should not be so high as to adversely affect ridership potential.
13. Efforts must continue to guarantee that the South Shore receives its fair share of state and federal funding for all mass transportation projects.

The Board of Directors gives its strong and continuing endorsement to the reconstruction of the Middleboro and Plymouth lines. The South Shore Chamber of Commerce stands ready to help push for the construction of those two lines in a timely and well organized manner.

Cohasset Agrees CARE to Recycle Everything

By Alix White
Special to the Mariner

In the pre-dawn morning, I flicked on the light in my kitchen, turned on the kettle, and saw my cleaning crew hard at work. I don't know why they provoke such guilt in me, such a feeling of inadequacy as a housekeeper, but there they were: two dozen common house ants scurrying around cleaning up after me.

"Okay dear," said one, "I know you had a busy day and couldn't get to everything, so I'll get this for you."

another sighed, "Honestly Alix, this is the same place you left the crumbs last week,"

"Ah Joe, come over here by the toaster. Ha, ha, she really let a mess," said another, completely ignoring my presence.

"All right everybody on six legs – listen up," I commanded, "I cleaned. You are just nit-picking. I had a roommate once who washed all her dishes before her mother came. I told her that her mother would be so pleased to come to such a clean house. She said, 'Oh no, she'll think that the house is filthy and wash all the dishes too.' Sure enough, her mother washed all the dishes. You ants are like my friend's mother."

I put out a little juice in a tall glass to avenge my guilt. I knew that the ants would walk miles for a little sugar. They would walk up the glass and fall in and drown. I could have used sugar water. I have seen other people put their jars of jam or honey in cans with water in them. The ants climb up the can to get to the jam and fall in the moat.

I have to keep reminding myself that ants and other insects are our cleaners. If they do not cause disease, then I should probably a) let them do their job, b) clean up a little better myself, or c) meet the situation half way and develop non-toxic methods of "bug control."

Non-toxic pest control relies heavily on the word prevention. The vacuum cleaner does a great job on the inside of the house. Organic farmers even vacuum their crops to such up the bugs. My vacuuming skills get a good workout in the warm weather.

Ants: They eat crumbs, and love sugar. Vacuum up crumb "hot spots" like the toaster area. Keep jam, honey jars clean. Put out trap of sweet water in a tall glass at night where ants appear.

Fleas: Live on dogs and cats because they have a higher body temperature than humans. Will go to humans if no other warm-blooded creature is available. Keep pets in confined area of house so fleas will not spread throughout house (kitchen, garage etc.). Give pet non-toxic flea bath (available at health food stores, some pet stores and veterinarians). Comb out flea eggs with flea comb on each affected pet. (I do this while I watch TV). Monitor the house for fleas through hot weather. Vacuum every day in affected area. Remember to take out vacuum bag or the fleas will jump out the hose. Some people spray pesticide in the bag and hose – just a little. I have had good results simply putting the bag outside until the next use.

Ticks: Found in long grass. Attach themselves to animals (including us). Monitor pets on a daily basis. Keep jar 1/4 filled with rubbing alcohol. After removing ticks from animal, simply put in this clearly marked "tick jar." Keep the jar for the season, May - July, and then dispose in household rubbish. Buy non-toxic flea/tick collar. Give animal daily diet of garlic. I whir up a week's worth of garlic and water in the blender and add it to the dog's food.

These are just a few ideas. Please share yours with us by writing to me: CARE, c/o Mariner, Colonial Pharmacy drop off box.

TROUBLE-SHOOTING AT THE RTF

It was great to be able to talk to so many of you last Sunday at the Recycling Center. We have a few bugs to iron out, but the Recycling Committee was impressed at how well we as Cohasset residents are recycling. Keep that recycling coming! It's saving tons.

Glass and plastic: Clean out containers. You can soak container overnight in used dish water, or put in dishwasher – what ever works for you. We are not giving out awards for cleanest container, so it doesn't have to be spotless and use gallons of water to et it that way, but please, make sure that the excess food is out of container. Please, take the caps off containers.

Corrugated cardboard: No cereal boxes here, they go in the trash. Corrugated is cardboard made with layers.

Newspaper: No plastic bags in the newspaper. Try putting paper in paper grocery bag. One week of a newspaper fits in one grocery bag. (There has been a huge improvement in newsprint collection. Thanks to all of you.)

Candidates

Candidate files tax bills

Rep. William J. Flynn, Jr., candidate for state senator for the Norfolk and Plymouth district, announced that he has filed three bills for the 1990 legislative session which would provide tax exemptions for elderly people.

Rep. Flynn said, "The three bills would: provide a tax exemption for families caring for their elderly relatives at home; set the rate of tax imposed on taxable income to persons who have attained the age of sixty-five at five percent; and exempt certain interest and dividends from taxation.

"I am dedicated to working hard to improve the quality of life for senior citizens on the South Shore and throughout the Commonwealth. These three bills would be a way to go about doing this."

Flynn seeks options study

Rep. William Flynn, Jr., candidate for state senator for the Norfolk and Plymouth district, testified before the committee on transportation recently regarding a bill he filed, cosponsored by the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, which would study the two transportation options of commuter boats and an express commuter bus lane.

At this hearing Flynn said, 'The South Shore's number one enemy is traffic congestion to and from Boston. Our duty and responsibility is to do everything within our power to alleviate this traffic congestion so our constituents can get in and out of Boston in a reasonable amount of time.

"My bill is especially timely for many reasons, including the start of construction of the central artery/third harbor tunnel project," Flynn said. "With traffic congestion problems exacerbated by this project, the idea of an express bus lane option all the way down to Cape Cod and the expansion of commuter boats should be seriously addressed.

"For environmental reasons," he said. "We must learn to tie the web of modern life together without the automobile by encouraging the full utilization of every available mode of public transportation because we know full well the negative effect the automobile has on the environment."

Kropas endorses Hussey

Weymouth Republican Town Chairman Richard Kropas has endorsed Donald Hussey for the Senate race in the Norfolk and Plymouth District.

Kropas said, "Don Hussey is a veteran, a former educator, and a former businessman. He has sold his business to become involved with re-establishing priorities in state government. He is deeply committed to the campaign and to serving in the legislature full time with no personal agenda or outside obligations; he will make an excellent Senator."

Hussey is running for the Senate seat which includes the towns of Weymouth, Scituate, Marshfield, Hull, Hingham, Duxbury, and Cohasset.

For more information on Citizens for Don Hussey, call 331-1470 or stop by the office in Weymouth Landing.

Community Center benefit

Coastal Country Properties Ltd. has joined forces with Hallmark 100 Properties Ltd. according to Chris Ford, Hallmark 100's President.

Julie Guild, Margery Dougherty, and associate Gordon Hislop are all Cohasset residents and veteran brokers who have joined Hallmark 100's Cohasset office on Ripley Road. Dougherty and Guild together co-founded Coastal Country Properties, Ltd., and were the principal brokers of that firm. They both hold the prestigious G.R.I. designation.

Guild has been an active broker since 1971, and was President of the Plymouth County Multiple Listing Service in 1987. Guild is also the chairman of the Cohasset Republican Town Committee.

Dougherty has been an active broker since 1972, and has been a State Director of the Massachusetts Association of Realtors for four years. She has also served as chairman of the Community Service Committee, and is presently on the Professional Standards Committee of the Plymouth County Board of Realtors.

"We are thrilled to be a part of such an outstanding group of brokers," says Dougherty. "While it was difficult to give up our identity as Coastal Country Properties, we concluded that by joining forces with Hallmark 100 we could offer our clients a wider range of services without sacrificing our independence. Hallmark 100, with its independent format and outstanding reputation, was a natural choice for us."

Halimark 100 Properties was founded in Cohasset in 1982 and now has offices in Scituate and Hingham as well. Only top performing brokers with outstanding sales records are invited to join. Hallmark 100 operates under a unique format whereby sales associates share expenses and have an active voice in corporate decision making.

"Having Julie Guild, Margery Dougherty, and Gordon Hislop join Hallmark is a real compliment to our firm," stated Ford. "Coastal Country Properties established an outstanding record in our marketplace and it is exciting to contemplate the growth that we can anticipate by working together."

Drains Run Slow?

You'll never have a slow running, or clogged drain again! The secret? Clean drains don't run slow.

Slow drains, or periodic clogs, are SIGNALS that a thick layer of GOOK is choking your pipes. Grease, hair, and other waste stick to your pipes, with every use. This gook deposits along the entire length of the pipe. It chokes your pipes gradually, as it gets thicker and thicker.

Conventional drain openers can't fix slow drains. They react chemically on the surface of the gook. To be effective, they must remain in contact with the waste. Even a small tunnel through the gook lets them flow out to the sewer, leaving the gook behind.

In the past, the only way to remove this build-up was to rooter your pipes. An expensive, temporary measure.

Now, with just a few minutes each month, you can easily clean out your pipes... and KEEP them clean with Plumb Clean. Its totally unique formula clings, and penetrates deep into the gook. That is what allows it to liquefy even years of build-up. Plumb Clean will clean the entire length of your pipes. It will make your drains run like new, when used as directed. This penetrating action is so revolutionary, we stand behind Plumb Clean with a money-back guarantee!

Saves Money. A 1 lb. container of Plumb Clean holds up to 41 drain treatments. Even if drain openers could fix slow drains, it would take over 10 quart bottles to get the same number of treatments. Plumb Clean costs about 35¢ per treatment. We don't know of anything that cleans drains for less.

Safe Too. Conventional drain openers are dangerous chemicals. They can injure eyes on contact. They can release deadly vapors, in some situations. Some may damage your fixtures. Plumb Clean will not burn skin, or eyes. It will not release harmful fumes. When used as directed, it is 100% safe for people, and of course, all plumbing.

So, if your drains are giving you a SIGNAL, act now. Get safe, guaranteed Plumb Clean today!

The following pairs emerged as champions: Advanced Mens': Tom DiPesa and Norman Swain; Advanced Womens': Christine Humphrey and Mary McLean; Advanced Mixed: Rich Redick and Shannon McGlame; Intermediate Mixed: James and Barbara Moore; Intermediate Men;s: William Corriveau and Leo Kelly; Intermediate Womens': Barbara Lombardy and Sue Rearden; Beginning/Intermediate Mixed: Michael and Julie Wasp.

Youth Winners were: Advanced Boys: John Brister and Tim Brister; Advanced Girls: Sophie Redfield and Michelle Massa; Intermediate Boys: Scott Van Hartesvelt and Daniel Thaxter-Steele; Intermediate Girls: Allison Kililea and Sarah Thompson; Beginner/Intermediate Mixed: Caitlin Connolly and Catie Campbell; Beginner Mixed: Megan Waal and Jessica Stevens.

The committee members who worked so hard to put this tournament together were: Betsy Connolly, Linda Coyle,. Sue Brister, Karen Devine, Meredith Gledhill, Jean Muir, Mimi Mulvey, Florrie Redick, Claudia Story, Carolyn Swain, Judy Volungis, Ellie Waal and Ronnie Wach.

Boating company opens

Cape Water Sports, the largest sunfish, and second largest Hobie Cat dealer has expanded its operation to Cohasset.

Born on the beaches of Cape Cod, the business began strictly as a sailboat rental. In five short years, the owners David Nolan and Patrick Turner have established themselves as the Sailing Specialists of Cape Cod.

Turner and Nolan purchased a store in Harwich Port and have created a multi-functional enterprise. They are now authorized dealers in Hobie Cat, HoSie Power, Laser, Mistral, Fanatic, O'Day by Pearson Yachts, Sunfish and HyFly. In addition, there is a full store of marine supplies and related apparel.

The new Cohasset location will carry a representation of all lines carried at the Harwich Port store. Patrick Turner is in charge of the store assisted by Ken Martin.

Annual garden tour

The ninth annual "Through the Garden Gate" Garden Tour, sponsored by the South Shore Natural Science Center, will be held on Wednesday, July 18, from 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. This year's tour features seven glorious gardens in Norwell and Hingham.

The Garden Tour committee, made up of Science Center volunteers and cochaired by Joan Kenworthy of Rockland and Priscilla Crosby of Hanson, has selected a variety of horticultural experiences to entice veteran gardeners and novices alike.

Cohasset Colonials cracks the Japanese market

Traditional American furniture produced by Cohasset-based Cohasset Colonials may soon be the centerpiece of traditional Japanese homes, the result of an effort to crack the Japanese marketplace initiated nearly two years ago by company president John Hagerty, with assistance from Governor Michael Dukakis's Export 90's program.

Cohasset Colonials' breakthrough was marked by two events. Last month, five buyers from Osaka, drawn by a company brochure distributed in Japan through the Massachusetts Port Authority's trade development unit, placed an order with the company – Cohasset Colonial's first sale to Japan.

Then Hagerty received an even more impressive statement of interest from the Japanese. The Japan External Trade Organization (JETRO), a government agency heavily involved in stimulating Japan to import goods from abroad, invited Hagerty to participate in its "Export to Japan Program."

The program will bring a group of 50 potential exporters in many product areas from the U.S., Canada, Australia, New Zealand, and Northern Europe to Japan for a ten-day, all-expenses-paid introduction to the Japanese market. The opportunity will provide unique insight into Japanese business practices, information on successful exporting techniques, and in-country contacts for future export efforts.

"Although we'd been participating in the Massport/Trade Development Program since 1981 and had many contacts and sales in the UK, France, Belgium, Germany and Denmark, by the mid-1980s, the increasing value of the dollar made it difficult for us to sell in Europe," explained Hagerty. "That's why we began working with Massport's Asia Trade Representative David Callahan to explore the potential of the Japanese furniture market."

After providing initial information on the Japanese furniture market and the country's business practices, Massport helped Cohasset Colonials gain exposure by distributing catalogs to potential importers and wholesalers at the 1989 International Furniture Fair Tokyo and at the 1990 U.S. Import Fair at the Tokyo Trade Center. The company was also a participant in the Massport/U.S. Department of Commerce-sponsored Furniture Mission, where Japanese buyers were brought to Massachusetts to tour furniture manufacturing plants. In addition, Massport recommended Hagerty to the MOIT for nomination to the JETRO program and has referred him to other members of the Export 90's team for financing aid.

Getting ready to market in Japan are a group of Export 90 workers. From left are: Patricia Givens, deputy director of the state office of international trade; Alden Raine, secretary of economic affairs; John Hagerty, president of Cohasset Colonials; Gov. Michael Dukakis; Kensaku Hogen, Japanese consul general, and Andrew Bendheim of Massport.

Andrew Bendheim, director of Massport's trade development unit, called Cohasset Colonials an Export 90's success story. "Cohasset Colonials, by persistently utilizing the export resources offered as part of the Export 90's program, graphically demonstrates to all small businesses in Massachusetts that they can expand into markets they may have only dreamed about. With the free or low cost services available from Massport and the other Export 90's members," stressed Bendheim, "Massachusetts companies can achieve Governor Dukakis's goal of doubling the state's exports over the next five years."

Art exhibit at Library

Currently on display in the Children's Room of the Paul Pratt Library is an exhibit of original art made for picture book illustrations by Cohasset native Sammis McLean. These intricate drawings in pen and ink and watercolor should be an inspiration to today's aspiring young Cohasset talents.

Sammis McLean was born and raised in Cohasset. He graduated from Cohasset High School and the Boston Art Institute. He lived briefly in Paris, but spent most of his working life 'n New York City. There, he studied at the Parsons School of Design and designed for the Muppet Productions and Sesame Street, as well as illustrating books for author Northern Calloway.

Though art was his major interest, he loved working on amateur theatre productions, and enjoyed his apprenticeship at the Music Circus while in high school.

Cohasset was his most favorite place. He always considered it home and came back whenever his work allowed. He died in Cohasset on Sept. 13, 1989.

Sammis was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Bruce McLean of Pond Street. His art will be on display until July 6.

JOINT EXERCISES

Unlike the common form of inflammatory arthritis known as rheumatoid arthritis, osteoarthritis is quite common. In fact, this form of arthritis affects 86 percent of women and 78 percent of men over age sixty-five. Osteoarthritis begins with damage to the cartilage which serves to reduce the amount of cushioning between bones in joints. Because this form of arthritis is so common in older people, it was thought to result from repetitive use of the joints. In fact, it is often called "wear and tear" arthritis. However, recent research indicates that exercise helps, not hinders, the joints. One such study centers around championship runners, ages 31 to 81. As a group, only 4 percent displayed any evidence of arthritis. Non-runners of the same age had a slightly higher incidence of the condition.

Oftentimes one suffers needlessly from chronic discomfort due to the misconception that nothing can be done. DR. DEBRA M. SUSAN EMMER, CHIROPRACTIC & FAMILY WELLNESS CARE, 87 Sohier St., Cohasset, 383-1330. We urge you to call for an appointment so that your situation may be assessed and a determination made as to how chiropractic applications can be of benefit. By appointment. Workers Comp. cases and most insurance plans accepted.

P.S. Runners have stronger, healthier bones with 40 percent more bone mass than non-exercisers.

Boy Scout restores nature trail

The environmentalists, students, and others can now enjoy taking a nature walk through the trimmed trail and paths adjacent to the Joseph Osgood School because of the leadership, organization and management of David Farrag, who organized a group to rejuvenate the pre-existing trail.

The project was first promoted by the Community Garden Club of Cohasset. David contacted the Garden Club's President, Phyllis Peck, and members, Patricia Buckley and Debra Cook. They discussed what restoration and reconditioning would be necessary to make the pathways safer and suitable for everyone's enjoyment. Most of the bushes and trees had become overgrown and blocked the trail. The pathway has a running stream throughout the trail and would need a secure bridge to be built. This was a challenging partaking and became Farrag's Eagle Scout Project. His responsibility would be to organize Scouts and friends to assist with the refurbishing of the trail. He set his personal goals. He received the permission and endorsement from the principal of the Joseph Osgood School, John Creamer.

With the assistance of Thomas Cook, Farrag learned how to prepare the ground prior to assembling the 16 foot bridge that would be built and the bridge construction. He organized scouts and friends to clear the trail by cutting and trimming the overgrowth and to remove fallen hazardous trees from the paths. He assisted in building the bridge. The project took many months of dedication and work before it was completed.

The Boy Scouts of America Eagle rank is the highest rank attained in scouting before the scout reaches his eighteenth birthday.

Farrag has progressed in scouting from his early years with the cub scout Pack 38 in Cohasset. He earned the Arrow of Light, which is the highest rank among a Webelo Scout. This patch is worn through the Boy Scout years. Farrag is a member of Cohasset's Troop 28 B.S.A. for seven years and the Explorer Post 28 for four years. He has held many positions as he was advancing in Boy Scouts including; Assistant Patrol Leader, Patrol Leader, Senior Patrol Leader, Instructor, and Junior Assistant Scoutmaster.

He attended the National Jamborees at Fort A.P. Hill, VA. in 1985 and 1989. He participated on OKPIK Winter Camping High Adventure in Maine. One of his most memorable moments was attending B.S.A. Camp Philmont in Cimmeron, New Mexico in 1988.

In May 1989 he was presented the Dr. Howard Reid Award for leadership and good citizenship by Troop 28.

Farrag graduated from Cohasset High School in June. He had participated in activities including football, hockey, baseball, audio visual aide and debating. He is employed part-time at the Red Lion Inn since 1985. He will be attending the freshmen class at Northeastern University in Boston in September where he plans to study political science.

Hingham author to give lecture on China tonight

By Kelley Tuthill
Mariner Staff

Hingham author Fox Butterfield will give an informal lecture of his updated work "China: Alive in the Bitter Sea" at Bookport Hingham Square tonight at 7.

An award-winning journalist and authority on China, Butterfield is the Boston-bureau chief for the New York Times.

Butterfield, his wife Elizabeth Mehren and their two-month-old son Sam have lived in Hingham for the past year and one half.

Although he spent 15 years oversees, Butterfield considers Boston his home town. He was raised in Cambridge.

While growing up, he spent a lot of time at his family's house on the mouth of Cohasset harbor. He said he drove through Hingham many times and "always thought it was a beautiful town."

Butterfield said that he and his wife, a native of San Francisco, were pleasantly surprised at how nice people are in Hingham. He said that Hingham is a wonderful place to raise a child.

While he misses the excitement of living in China, Butterfield said that he loves living in Hingham. He especially likes the nice, friendly atmosphere and the sense of community that exists throughout the town.

In addition to his work at the Times, Butterfield is at work on his next project. He is working on a book about a black family in New York who has produced three generations of murderers. In this family, the grandfather, the father and the son all committed murders in a similar fashion.

The remarkable part of this story is that the men never met or knew each other.

This project draws upon Butterfield's original interest in the history of America's South. The family was originally from the rural South and moved to Harlem in the 1940s.

He said he became aware of this family while working on a story for the Times.

The lecture Butterfield will be giving in Hingham will focus, however, on China. He revisited China in 1989, 10 years after living there as the first Times Peking bureau chief, to explore the causes and consequences of the student demonstrations and the events of Tiananmen Square.

In an updated edition of "China: Alive in the Bitter Sea", winner of the 1982 National Book Award and Overseas Press Club Award, he assesses the impact of the recent turmoil.

Reflecting on his return to China, Butterfield wrote, "The month-long assignment gave me a rare chance, a special privilege for an author, to test my earlier judgments in this book against what has happened in China since I had left there in 1981."

Butterfield reveals life in China through dozens of encounters with ordinary Chinese: students, factory workers, peasants, children of high-ranking officials, victims of labor reform camps, prostitutes, artists, and young people anxious to come to America.

Through his research, Butterfield discovered that what enabled the Chinese Communists to cling to power, as their counterparts in Eastern Europe were toppling, was that they had created a far more extensive control apparatus.

Looking toward the future, however, Butterfield found surprising optimism from a professor at Peking University. He quotes: "It was the Cultural Revolution that destroyed Maoism. It will be the reaction against the Tiananmen Square massacre that will end Communism..."

Butterfield studied Chinese language and history at Harvard, where he graduated summa cum laude. After graduate work at Harvard and further study of Chinese in Taiwan on a Fulbright Fellowship, he joined the New York Times as a part-time correspondent in Taipei in 1969.

Prior to his arrival in Beijing in 1979 as the first Times bureau chief, he had been a reporter for the Times in Asia, stationed in South Vietnam, Japan, and Hong Kong.

Butterfield was a member of the Time's reporting team that won the Pulitzer Prize for its publication of the Pentagon Papers in 1971. The first edition of "China: Alive in the Bitter Sea" was a selection of the Literary Guild and Reader's Digest Condensed Books.

Signed copies of Butterfield's book may be reserved by calling Bookport at 749-2670. Bookport is located in the new Pride Building at 21 Main Street. Hours are Monday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

Teams face thrill of victory and agony of defeat

By John Kinchla
Special to the Mariner

It was a bittersweet week for the Cohasset Pony League teams. Bad luck struck the Sestito Landscaping Pirates this week and without the services of Jim Magner, the Pirates were eliminated from the Pony League. The Cohasset Heights Yankees though have continued their winning ways and are now in the finals of the Pony League playoffs.

First the bad news. Coach Roy Fitzsimmons reported that the Pirates easily defeated their first round opponent, Norwell on Saturday, June 16, by a score of 14 to 4. In this first round game, Joe Andrade pitched a complete game striking out 12 Norwell batters. Nate Fiore stroked a home run to ice the win. "Everyone played a strong game", said Fitzsimmons.

In the second round, the Pirates played Scituate DPW. (DPW's only loss of the season thus far was to the Cohasset Heights Yankees.) The Pirates fell behind early, but rallied to an 8 to 7 score before the game slipped away. The final score in this contest was 15 to 7.

The Pirate roster had many stellar performers, listed below are the members of the team. Joey Andrade, Nate Fiore, Tim Brister, Dave Leahy, Ryan Freeman, Brian Buckley, Ben Berger, Andy Fitzsimmons, Steve Harrington, Josh Roth, Nick Welz, Chip Moore, Ryan Sawchuk, Brad Potolicchio, Nate Caldwell, Jim Magner and Brian Duffy.

The Cohasset Heights Pony Yankees after beating Norwell played the Scituate Planning board. Chris Rolandelli pitched magnificently and Chris Kondrat provided relief.

The Yankees rallied in the fourth inning when Brian Pattison slapped a double to left field. Then the barrage began. Brendan Kinchla singled, Peter Fahey singled, Rolandelli singled, Kondrat walked, Ed Taylor walked, Chris Stevens walked. Chris Kondrat stole home. The team batted around. The Yankees also played outstanding defense. Two stellar plays were made by the Yankees. Left fielder Brian Pattison caught a fading fly ball hit to left centerfield, and third baseman Brendan Kinchla and centerfielder John Maynard combined on a putout off a fly ball to end a Scituate rally in the fourth inning. The Yankees now advance to the second round of the playoffs.

Little League International Senior League Tournament

Coach Brian Fahey has volunteered his services to coach Cohasset's entry in the tournament. Any child having an interest in playing should contact Fahey at 383-0169. The tournament will begin on July 12.

Major League Action

Alco Oil Players of the Week Awards went to National Abatement Pirate 11 year old Robbie Buckley. Robbie blasted a grand slam in the Pirates loss to the Cohasset Firefighters Dodgers.

The Cohasset Firefighter Dodgers have closed the gap in their stretch drive for first place in a heated four way race with the Mets, Red Sox and A's.

Sports

The Dodgers helped themselves at the Pirates expense. On Saturday, June 18, Grant Emde and Justin Buckley combined their pitching skills to beat the Pirates. Later in the week, Matt Lewis posted 12 strikeouts as the Dodgers once again beat the Pirates. In this game Dave Marr banged out 4 hits to help Lewis with the win. The Pirates, Keith Jackson played an impressive game in the field.

Suburban League

Selection of the 9, 10, 11, and 12-year-old post season traveling teams have been completed. The following individuals are the coaches: Jay Caron, 12 year olds, Dave Buckley, 11 year olds, Kevin Lewis, 10 year olds and John Smoot, 9 year olds. The rosters and the schedules for all teams in the Suburban League will appear in the Mariner next week.

CHINS Tourney Team

The 11/12 year old Cohasset, Hingham, Norwell, Scituate (CHINS) Tourney will start on Saturday June 30 at Barnes Field. The schedule is as follows:

Saturday June 30

8 a.m., Cohasset vs Scituate
11 a.m., Scituate vs Norwell
2 p.m., Norwell vs Hingham
5 p.m., Hingham vs Cohasset

Sunday July 1

Home Teams on Sunday are determined by a coin toss
11 a.m., Cohasset vs. Norwell
2 p.m., Scituate vs. Hingham
5 p.m., Championship game if necessary.

Minor League Action

Mass 4X4 Association Minor League Player of the Week Award goes to Robby Moody. Rob has been instrumental in helping the surging Giants towards the top.

A three way race still exists for first place among the Giants, A's and Braves in the 10/11 Minor League Division.

Farm League Action

All Farm League Teams played last week. There were too many stars to report. Please see farm team profile in attached article.

Please report all game results by calling 575-4208.

Parents Meeting, Deer Hill School, Tuesday June 26, at 9:15 p.m. to discuss selection of players and preparation for the tournament season.

Injury Report

Senior Leaguer, Pat Reynolds of the Cohasset Height Yankees is reported in good condition after getting hit in the face by a fly ball.

Minor Leaguer, Maura Duffy has recovered from her broken nose and has returned to active duty.

The Minor League Pirates ace center fielder, Ben Peterson would appreciate get well cards. Ben was hit in the face by a fly ball at a practice last week. His condition is good although he did receive stitches, lost some teeth, and his face is still swollen.

Profile on the Cohasset Minor League (Good Sport) Dodgers

The 8/9 minor league Dodgers have steadily battled for improved league standing and team respect all season. The Dodgers under Ray Hanian, Ron Nicynski and Sam Wakeman have also steadily improved with each game. The team has been winning and now are challenging for the top spot. They appear to be peaking for a final run at first place.

First Baseman and Pitcher Eric Hanian has contributed as has Catcher and Third Basemen Ronnie Nicynski. Ben Roine gives the Dodgers two way firepower. Denis Rooney plays first base and bats fourth. Andrew Ross holds down second base, while Cornelia Wakeman patrols centerfield and hits with power. Slick Caitlan Donovan is at shortstop and Liam O'Donnell alternates with Wiley Wakeman behind the plate.

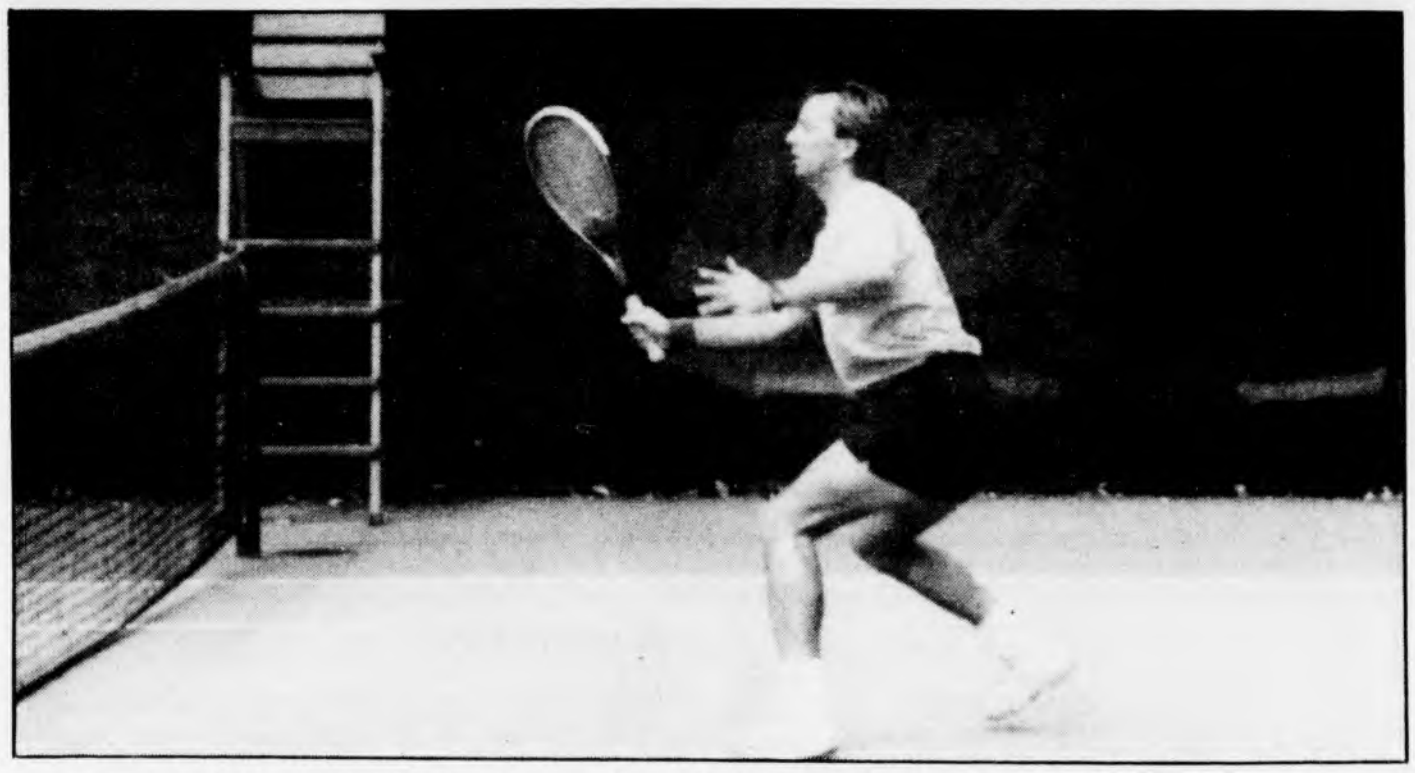
The 'battling' Dodgers will have to be reckoned with this year as they have depth in all positions.

Melissa McLaughlin plays the left field power alley, Jordan Fiore is in right field. Joseph Nicynski plays both shortstop and outfield as does Nicholas Minicolla. The Dodgers have a bright future as their success has been provided by an excellent defense.

Profile on the Cohasset Little League (Leo's Exxon) Red Sox



The Red Sox under the coaching of Jim Magner and Dick Stevens are rebuilding after having won the championship last year but you would never know that by their standings. The Sox are currently tied for first place within the five team major league division with the Met's and the A's.

The Red Sox success has been due to their diligence on the field. They are improving in the field. The team started the season with four veteran players and nine rookies. Helping the Red Sox ascension have been veterans Joe Magner, Kevin McKenna, Brian Riley and Greg Stevens. Added to the Red Sox roster this year were Jerry Cogill, Kevin Duffy, Justin Golden, Andy Hamilton, Todd Harrington, Patrick Hurley, Simeon Ketchum, Bob Meehan and Matt Verrochi.

The veterans have played brilliantly for the Red Sox according to all reports.

Bob Meehan has provided the team with pitching support, while Marc Verrochi and Simeon Ketchum have been playing steadily in the field. Rookies, Jerry Cogill, Kevin Duffy, Justin Golden and Andy Hamilton have stabilized the outfield defense and have provided timely hitting. Simeon Ketchum has provided a big glove at first base and Todd Harrington and Pat Hurley have been threats on the base paths.

Team attitude and persistence have also been a factor in the improving performance of the Red Sox. All the players have contributed both on the field and in the dugout to a positive team attitude this season.

One of the many tennis players who worked to benefit the Community Center.

MBA offers insurance guide

The Massachusetts Bar Association is offering to consumers, free of charge, copies of its new pamphlet, "A Consumer's Guide to Auto Insurance." The pamphlet explains in simple terms the areas of coverage that affect motorists when an accident results in personal injury. These areas are personal injury protection, bodily injury coverage, uninsured motorist coverage and underinsured motorist coverage. In explaining each type of coverage, the pamphlet emphasizes specific points including:

•The amount of bodily injury coverage required by law ($10,000 per person, $20,000 per accident) is grossly inadequate.

•Underinsurance is the most important coverage consumers can have to protect themselves in accidents with cars that have too little coverage.

•A driver at fault in an accident should have sufficient bodily injury coverage to protect current and future assets. Judgments against at fault drivers are enforceable for 20 years.

•A driver's premiums cannot be increased when an insurer has to pay uninsured or underinsurance benefits.

For a free copy of "A Consumers' Guide to Auto Insurance" send a stamped, self-addressed, business-size envelope to Insurance Guide, Massachusetts Bar Association, 20 West Street, Boston, MA 02111-1204.

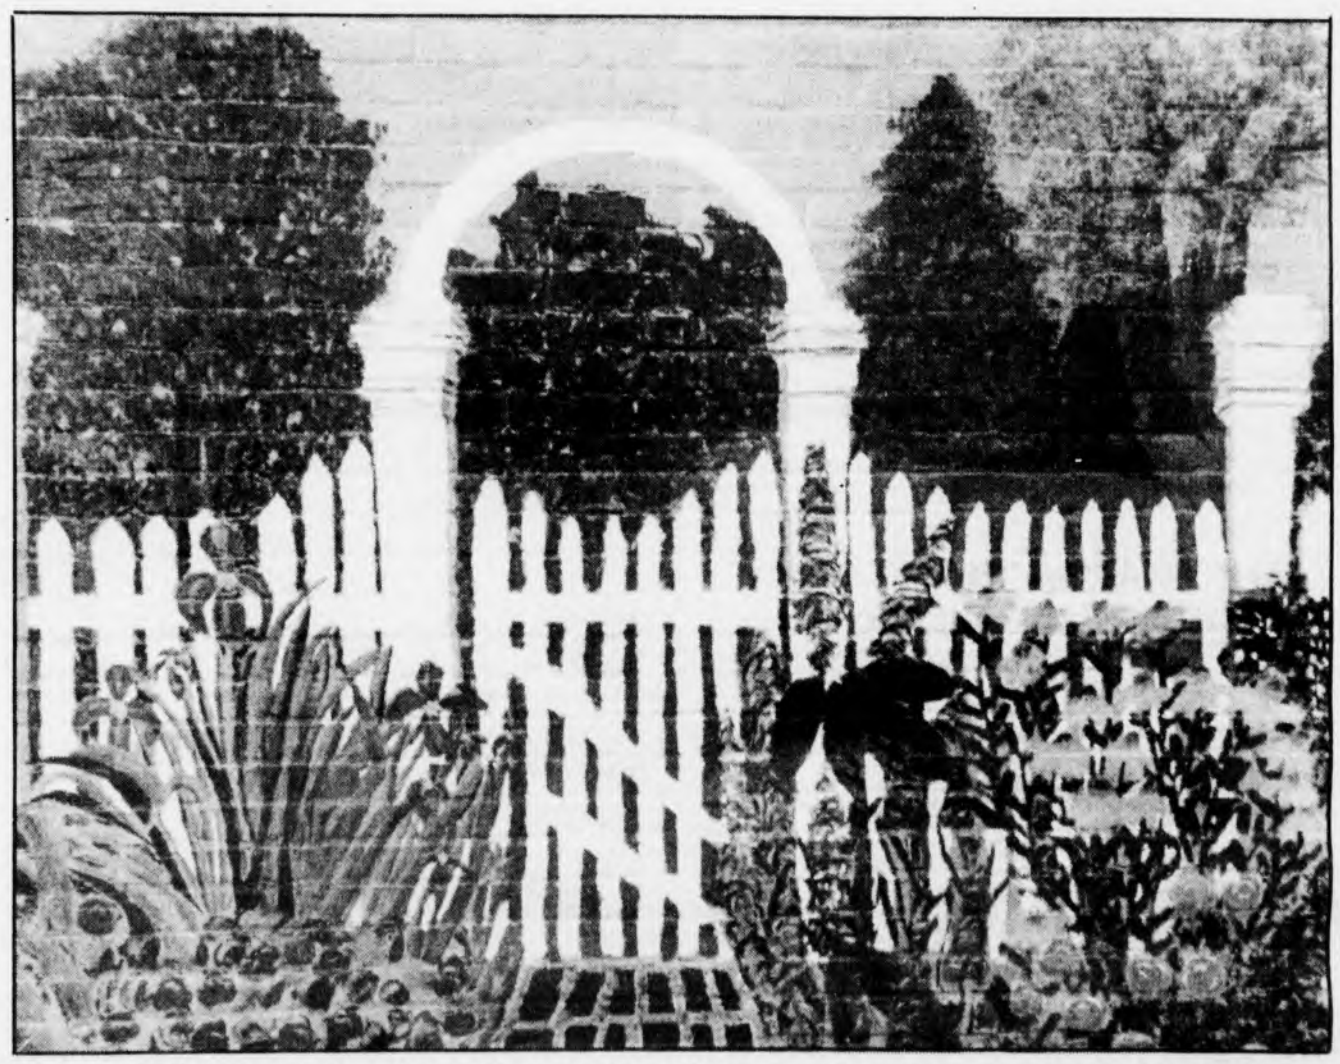
Other sites considered for cemetery

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

The cemetery committee went back to the drawing board last night to see if there were any alternatives to the unpopular Pleasant Street cemetery site. The last meeting of the committee was marked by a high turn-out of disgruntled abutters of the proposed cemetery on Pleasant Street. In contrast, this meeting was sparsely attended.



After going through the assessors' maps page by page, they managed to identify 14 parcels that warranted a closer look. Most of those parcels had been on an earlier list of 18 that was culled down to the Pleasant Street site. Committee chairman Glenn Pratt said the next step is to compare the parcels with watershed, floodplain, soil, water and topographical maps to eliminate those parcels that are inappropriate.

Ledge, swampy areas and inaccessibility will almost certainly eliminate all but a handful of sites., according to the committee members. Water and rock are the bane of would-be developers in Cohasset.

Other tasks on the committees list of things-to-do includes determining how many unsold and unused grave lots exist. Lax record-keeping prior to 1952 have made this a daunting task for others who have tackled it, according to Pratt and committee member Mary Hartwell.

The committee will also reexamine the needs

MBTA official counters arguments on RR

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

For Stephen Polechronis, the man charged with heading up development of the Old Colony railroad, the bottom line means expanding the transportation options for the greatest number of people.

"Greenbush does help to make the project cost effective," Polechronis said during an interview this week on the financial underpinnings of the $561 million project.

"But the people directly served by the Greenbush line — people in Scituate, Hull, Hingham, Cohasset, etc. — have the least options."

If he has his way, the Old Colony line will break ground before the end of the year.

"It would be at the very end of the year," he said. Construction would be complete in 1994.

He pointed out that the highway network along the shore is highly congested.

In the past talk of major improvements to state highways has met organized opposition.

Routes 3A, 228 and 123 are the most congested in the Old Colony project area, Polechronis said.

"The support for the project in the legislature goes beyond the area," he said. "It's there because the project makes sense."

He disputes the figures pulled together by opponents of the Greenbush line. The opponents have charged that it will cost $37,000 per rider for the restoration project.

Polechronis said he understands where the number comes from but he disagrees with the method.

"The Greenbush folks took all the capital costs of the line and divided the figure by the number of projected riders. But that's like saying everyone will take the railroad to Boston one day, one way and stay there. These costs should be considered over a much longer time."

He flipped through a copy of the Environmental Impact Statement to find the cost.

His own guess at the cost per rider was on the high side compared with the table prepared according to federal standards. That table showed the cost per new rider at $13.97 if all three branches of the Old Colony line are restored to service.

"This is calculated the way the feds figure it," Polechronis said.

He pointed out that some capital costs — like the money for the track — will cover 50 years' use. Other equipment, like the coaches and locomotives, will last 25 to 30 years.

As far as the overall figure of $561 million, which is up from the $391 million that was used in public discussion last year, Polechronis puts the major blame on inflation.

"You're right that if we went out to bid today the price would probably be lower. The construction industry is soft right now. But we aren't going out to bid until the end of the year and we don't feel it's prudent to bank on a continuing slowdown."

Of the $561 million total, $100 million is there to cover inflation.

Polechronis said another major reason for the projected cost increase is that the doubledeck coaches that will run along the line cost more than anticipated.

The MBTA now has a contract with Kawasaki Heavy Industries to produce the rolling stock. The contract amounts to $145 million for the Old Colony trains.

Polechronis also said the noise mitigation will cost more than initially expected. Some of that increased noise mitigation money is earmarked for Hingham. Other places where noise will cost the T more than originally thought include Abington, Braintree and Kingston.

Drainage costs for the station parking lots will require increased spending from the first estimates.

Also the cost of the Kingston station and new Route 3 interchange is higher than anticipated.

"That interchange is so substandard, we have to

Taverna dishes out Greek tasties

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

The weather would not cooperate, but it couldn't destroy the festive mood of the annual Taverna.

To the casual observer, Cohasset is a sleepy, seaside village they imagine is occupied by nothing but stern New England types. But every year, the Nativity-Assumption of the Virgin Mary Panagia Greek Orthodox Church treats Cohasset and her neighbors to a taste of Greek culture. For five days, even the rock-ribbed Yankee sea captains can pretend to be Zorba the Greek.

The church spreads out its food fair on the front lawn of the massive stone church with it's spectacular red stained-glass windows in honor of the Fourth of July.

This year, Taverna-goers crowded under the bright yellow and white striped tents and defied the wind and rain and made merry.

Although some pre-teens won't recognize any music unless it is sung by Bobby Brown or Paula Abdul, they were definitely in the minority. As the Asteria Band played and Harry Athanasiou sang, young and old danced hand in hand. Toddlers with ruffles on their tushes joined with college girls and bearded grandfathers in merry abandon.

Teams of folkdancers took over from time to time to show just how intricate and special the dances are.

Polechronis talks about Greenbush's bottom line

scrap it and start all over," Polechronis said.

Debbie Cook of Cohasset, one of the members of the Citizens Advisory Committee who opposes the plan on the basis of its cost, has criticized the rail plan for not doing enough.

Her view is that the number of projected riders daily on the Greenbush line (which is estimated roughly at 3,400) is not enough to help Route 3 in Braintree with its own estimated flow of 60,000 vehicles.

The service and patronage impact report guesses that with construction of all three lines, Greenbush would attract 3,341 riders. About half of them would park in lots along the route. Nearly 700 would be dropped off, according to the projections. And 986 people would walk. Another 179 would arrive by other means.

Polechronis has answers for all objections.

"If people look to depend on downtown Boston for employment, and actually the figures for the South Shore are quite high – higher than for the North Shore – they have to have an effective way of getting there.

"I think everyone will agree the highways are too congested," he said.

In his transportation plan for the South Shore, the commuter boat would continue to run. He admits some riders may be lured away from the water route when faster transportation is available over the rails but he says the MBTA will continue to subsidize the commuter boat.

"There may be smaller boats," he said.

Polechronis believes most of the opposition to the Greenbush line is coming from people who live along the right-of-way.

"These people have a legitimate interest," he said, adding that balloting by voters in the South Shore has consistently shown most people want rail service.

CURRENT PLANS

Current plans for the Old Colony commuter rail service call for all three branches to operate.

The one-way fare from Hingham and Cohasset to Boston would be $2.50 under current rates.

Under current state law, towns do not experience increased assessments for new MBTA station.

The overall cost of the MBTA operation would increase with the restoration of commuter rail service to the South Shore but under state law the T may only increase assessments by 2 1/2 percent a year. Unless state law changes, the state must pick up any additional cost, Polechronis said.

The Greenbush line would run from South Station directly to Weymouth Landing without a stop.

Stephen Polechronis, MBTA project manager, said if Quincy's elected officials wanted a stop in their city, then the T would go along with that.

"They haven't indicated they want a stop," he said.

The second stop would be East Weymouth, then West Hingham, Nantasket Junction (which is actually in Hingham near the Hull line), Cohasset, North Scituate and Greenbush.

Eminent domain proceedings for the Greenbush line would not involve any businesses currently in operation in either Hingham or Cohasset, according to Polechronis. There would be some businesses affected by land takings in Weymouth and Scituate, he said.

The Plymouth line would have stops in South Weymouth, Abington, Whitman, Hanson, Halifax, Kingston and Plymouth. The only house taken by eminent domain for the Old Colony project is located in Kingston near the Route 3 interchange.

The Middleborough line would have stops in Braintree, Holbrook, three in Brockton, Bridgewater and Middleborough.

The projections done by the Sverdrup Corp. for the MBTA shows that if the Greenbush line isn't rebuilt, there would be an increase in the number of people using the South Weymouth station.

"That isn't fair," Polechronis said.

Cemetery site search resumes assessment data. Hartwell's research showed that many of the deaths in Cohasset are residents of Cohasset Knolls nursing home. A substantial number of those individuals are buried outside Cohasset, she said.

"We're burying an average of 60 people a year," Hartwell said.

While the selectmen charged the committee with finding solutions to meet the needs for the next 25 years, Pratt thought that might be too short-sighted. He encouraged the committee to think longer range than that.

Grave sites in Cohasset are at a premium and local officials are working to solve the plot shortage.

Although professional standards suggest that cemeteries of less than 15 acres are not advisable, Cohasset may not have that luxury. At the direction of the selectmen, the cemetery committee will examine the feasibility of smaller parcels of land on a cost-benefit basis.

Although cremation plots and columbarium vault with niches for urns containing the ashes from cremations have been suggested as solutions to the space crunch for cemetery plots. Although there is a trend toward cremation, according cemetery commissioner Peter Laugelle, it is a very small trend. Laugelle's most recent figures showed a steady rate of cremations in the order of one out of every four deaths.

Recreation department sponsors summer programs

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

If your kids are already complaining that there's nothing to do, hotfoot it down to the recreation department and sign them up.

According to recreation director Jack Worley, lots of new and exciting things have been added to the old favorites so there is something for everyone from tots to teens and beyond.

The mainstay of the summer recreation program is the playground program. Unlike the traditional playground programs where kids are free to come and go as fancy takes them, the Cohasset program is structured more like a day camp, making it a welcome alternative to day care for working parents and their children. Although the program began July 2, late registrations are welcome.

The playground program is restricted to Cohasset residents or children visiting with residents.

The recreation department runs the program for seven weeks. Children aged five to 12 attend full day sessions lasting from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Three and four year olds have a separate program that runs from 9 a.m. to noon. Children can attend for fewer days per week or for portions of a day as long as they sign in and out.

Worley anticipates 200 to 250 children will attend this summer.

Proof of the program's popularity is that the children come at the beginning of the season and stay through until the end. That also presents a challenge – a drop-in program can get away with limited activities, but the child who stays for the full seven weeks needs more variety to keep his interest.

"We have to have more diversity to satisfy the child who attends more frequently," Worley said.

The recreation department has built up the program with that in mind. In addition to sports and arts and crafts activities, a full schedule of field trips and special events has been planned. Because the recreation programs must be self-supporting, a minimal fee is charged for those attending the programs. Children who do not attend the playground or who live out of town may sign up for special events on a space-available basis.

Among the treats planned, are magic shows,

For your Oriental rug to retain its beauty and value, it should be cleaned at least once every three to five years.

At Grillo Oriental Rug Cleaning, we carefully examine each rug, then give it the most suitable treatment. Sometimes that means gentle machine-washing, other times it means our 'Art-Safe' hand-washing. And our exclusive equipment and methodology enable us to remove the deep-set grit that others miss.

Furthermore, unlike harsh commercial cleaning, our individualized, museum-quality care is always safe, always effective.

clown acts, jugglers and plays. Trips to Starland, Grape Island, Skatetown USA and other favorite spots are on the calendar. Thanks to grants from local businesses, the cost of the special programs is usually kept in the $3 to $5 range.

The first special event is scheduled for Friday, July 6 when Rhode Island's Perishable Theater brings "The Coyote Stories" to town. Coyote is a trickster and mischief-maker in traditional Native American folklore. Expect lots of laughter if you treat yourself to an afternoon with Coyote. For more information or reservations, call or visit the recreation department or drop by the playground program at Joseph Osgood School to sign up.

Eventually the recreation department would like to offer special events on a year round basis.

The recreation commission also received two grants from the arts lottery program that enabled them to improve the arts and crafts program.

One grant for $200 allowed them to hire Nancy Connolly from the South Shore Arts Center as a consultant. Connolly reorganized the program, planned the activities, developed the "shopping list" and trained the playground staff.

The other grant allowed the recreation department to purchase $250 worth of basic supplies and materials like glue and scissors. The arts and crafts projects also rely on "found" or "recycled" materials brought in from home.

Running a successful teen program is a harder proposition.

"The teenage group is really difficult to plan for," Worley said. On the one hand, their lives are so overstructured that they desperately want loosely structured programs that promote socialization. Fitting those programs into their busy schedules is difficult.

The winter ski trips are an example of the perfect teen program – the kids climb on a bus at 5 a.m. on Sunday bound for ski country and get back home utterly exhausted and happy around 8 or 9 p.m. Although the trips are well-chaperoned, the teens feel independent.

Unfortunately, there isn't any snow in the summertime.

The rec department would love to see a well-run teen center start up. Since that isn't likely to happen any time soon because of the economy, the next best thing the recreation department can do is offer sports lessons and camps that stress skill-development.

Worley said the intense, week-long training camps are particularly popular.

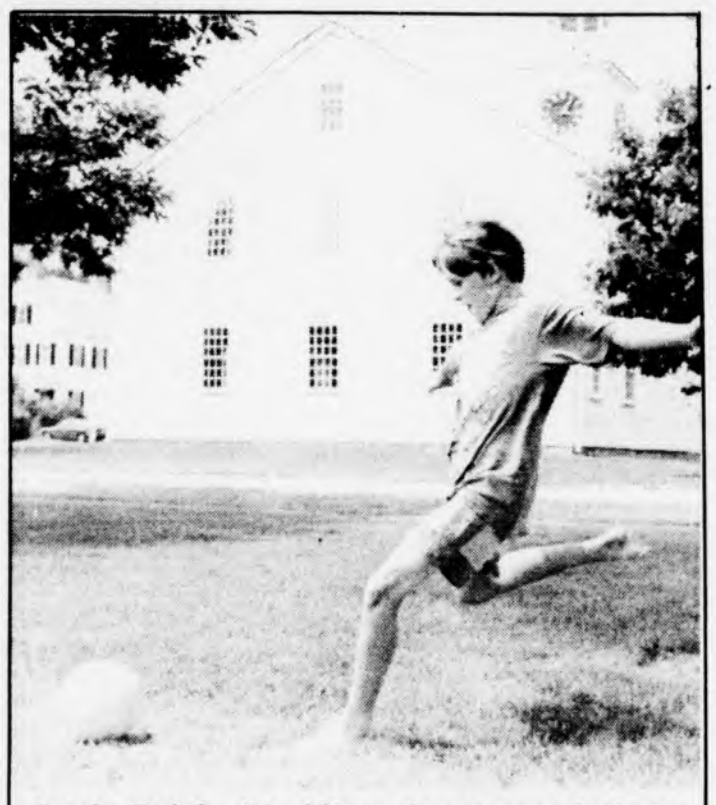
Golf, tennis, soccer, baseball and softball programs are offered during the course of the summer. The recreation department also sponsors a wrestling clinic and a low impact aerobic exercise class. These programs are also available for children. The soccer camps are available for children as young as four and five.

The camp for the teeny ones runs from 8 a.m. to 9:30 a.m. By the time the youngsters are six and seven, they're pretty "sophisticated" soccer players. Their camp runs on a half-day basis, from 9:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Those programs are coed.

From eight to 18, the camps are full day and separated into programs for boys and girls.

The department believes recreation is a lifelong need. Adults can sign up for golf and tennis lessons or join in the aerobics classes.

People of any age are welcome at the band concerts on the common. Because the budget was entirely eliminated last year, this year's concerts are brought to the residents through the kind gift of the South Shore Playhouse Associations, Inc. and the American Federation of Musicians.



The remaining free concerts are scheduled for July 24 and August 14 beginning at 7:30 p.m.

The special events programs offered through the playground program are also open to adults and teens by preregistration if space is available.

Last, but not least – if Fido is driving you bonkers, consider signing him up for dog obedience classes. A new session begins every eight weeks and continues throughout the year. A new session begins soon and registration is first come, first served. For more information or to enroll your pooch, call the recreation department at 383-6791.

The recreation department has brochures on all the programs. They encourage residents to stop by and check out what's going on for summer.

They have the cure for the summertime blues.

Brennock to retire from CHS

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

Mary Brennock started life as the second to the youngest of 12 children. Being surrounded by children must have seemed the only way to live, because in addition to raising four of her own, she has been shepherding Cohasset youngsters ever since.

On July 31, Brennock will retire from her job as guidance department secretary, ending a nearly 21-year career.

Although she's always been part of the guidance department, she's also worked at Joseph Osgood School and Deer Hill School. As much as she is looking forward to her retirement, saying goodbye is going to be hard.

"I'll miss the job. I love the people I work with," Brennock said.

Brennock took her job seriously.

"In the guidance department you are dealing with every single student. It is very confidential work," she said. "At times it can be very demanding, very busy. But you can't make mistakes."

And then she returned to talking about how much she loved the job, the staff and the students. She wrote a poem for the 1990 Cohasset High School yearbook, Tessahoc, telling them all, "Now it's time to move on/ And as I bid you adieu;/ I'll enjoy my Retirement/ But will miss all of you!!"

The schools may just miss her more. To show their appreciation for all the years of service, the Cohasset Teachers Association held a dinner in her honor June 7 and gave her a gift. That was followed by a luncheon in the courtyard at the high school with more gifts on June 18. Good things must also come in threes — the guidance department hosted an open house in Brennock's honor on the nineteenth. The guidance department invited Brennock's family to join in the celebration.

As a special treat during the open house, the staff put on a skit under the direction of guidance counselor, Anne Porter. The skit was developed just for the occasion. Ginny Burbank of the English department penned a song especially for Brennock that was performed by the music teachers, Colleen Foley and Bryan Marks. Ten days later, Brennock was still tickled pink as she recalled the event.

She also confided that her job was special because it allowed her to keep in touch with the youngsters she taught in St. Anthony's CCD. Her watchful and loving eye didn't end with their confirmation in the second grade. Brennock loved seeing them arrive as seventh graders and was proud of their accomplishments when they graduated from high school.

For the past few years, the high school has sponsored an orientation camping program for students entering the ninth grade. The students take off for a weekend accompanied by guidance counselors, teachers, peer counselors — and Mary Brennock.

Brennock probably had more fun than anyone, and her skits and camp songs are legendary parts of the rite of passage from junior high to senior high school. With a little luck, the current crop of incoming ninth graders will get to experience Brennock's tomfoolery. The guidance department has asked Brennock to come along this September "for old times' sake."

"I'm thinking about going along on the trip," she said. Her biggest concern is that she not cramp her successor's style. She wants to give the next secretary a pressure-free opportunity to shape the job the way she wants it.

Retirement definitely won't turn Brennock into a snowbird. She and her husband, Henry, live in the house she was born and raised in. She brought up all four children in Cohasset and three of her 12 grandchildren are Cohasset-born-and-bred.

But she doesn't plan on being an old stick-in-the-mud, either. Travel is definitely on their agenda, but there are no immediate plans. Right now it's enough to know that she and Henry can pick up and go if the spirit move them.

"We can do whatever we want, whenever we want, however we want," Brennock marvelled.

Mary Brennock

When they do get around to traveling, taking a trip cross-country from Cohasset to California sounds appealing. They haven't traveled in the western United States.

Once upon a time, Brennock had to travel all the way to Hawaii to see her son, Danny, who was stationed there. The Navy recently transferred Danny to duty in the Pentagon. Of his prestigious assignment, she said, "He'd rather be flying." The best part of the transfer is that it brings Danny, his wife and their three children back to the east coast.

The other Brennock kids — H. Edward of Cohasset, Maureen Yalenezian of Hanson and Kana Taft of Whitman — also had three children each. Brennock's grandbabies range in age from 1 1/2 to 20.

Christmas is a special time for the Brennock clan. Mary and Henry dress up as Mr. and Mrs. S. Claus to help the grandchildren get into the holiday swing of things. The Brennocks have also been known to donate their Claus services to area Cub Scouts. They are naturals in the roles.

And although Brennock retired from teaching the second grade CCD class two or three years ago, she still delights in putting together the annual Christmas pageant at St. Anthony's.

Brennock also makes room in her life for arts and crafts. She particularly enjoys knitting. For a lady with "no immediate plans," she has a full dance card.

Or, as she admits, "I'll never be bored."

Village Renaissance meeting

Bring ideas and suggestions with your brown-bag lunch to the Village Renaissance meeting at noon on Tuesday, July 10, at the South Shore Art Center on Ripley Road.

Cohasset merchants, business persons, town officials, and residents are welcome to this grassroots program to spruce up Cohasset's downtown and harbor areas.

Village Renaissance has drawn together the Cohasset community in a number of interesting projects. Beginning with Earth Month (April), volunteers have cleaned up litter-strewn pockets of land and beautified storefronts and open spaces with flowers.

The South Shore Art Center and the Cohasset Historical Society have transformed empty display windows into alluring showcases. Cohasset High School art students and teachers have embellished the vacant lot near the old Central Market with a colorful "Public Garden" mural. And, most recently, a real flower garden has blossomed in the reflection of the painted one.

Future plans include building a working replica of the old town pump and horse trough, to be installed at the corner of Elm and Main streets in front of Cohasset Hardware Store. The intention is to create an attractive focal point for Cohasset's historic downtown area. Many townspeople and town departments have already shown strong support for the idea. Village Renaissance will be looking for suggestions on how to raise funds for this unique Cohasset monument.

The meeting July 10 at the Art Center will provide an opportunity for all interested persons to discuss this and other projects that will benefit Cohasset and the local business community.

Members of Ray Levine's fifth grade class at Deer Hill School display Radon test kits as they pose with Joseph Godzik, V.M.D., Cohasset's health officer. Godzic is president-elect of the Norfolk County-Newton Lung Association's board of directors, one of 25 agencies chosen by the environmental protection agency to educate families about the dangers of radon gas. For more information call the NC-NLA at (508) 668-6729.

Scouts prepare for jubilee

Troop 28 Boy Scouts of America, formerly Troop 1, (1916-1940) and Troop 23, (1949) of Cohasset, are trying to locate all its past members. Troop 28 was formed in the 1940s.

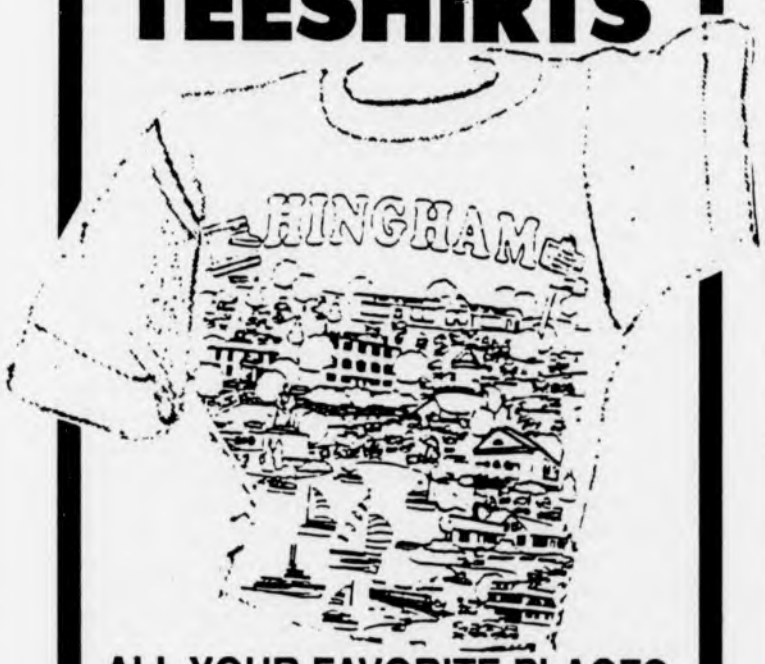
The Cohasset Troop 28 is preparing to celebrate the "Diamond 75th Jubilee" in 1991. Anyone who is a past member or knows the addresses of the members, please contact Arthur Lehr, P.O. Box 190, Cohasset, MA 02025 or call 383-0388.

If anyone has any scouting memorabilia such as: old uniforms, books, pictures etc., Troop 28 could borrow for a display, please notify Arthur Lehr.

'Hard labor' in Florida

Sixteen teenage and six adult volunteers will be going on the third annual service project sponsored by the churches of Cohasset.

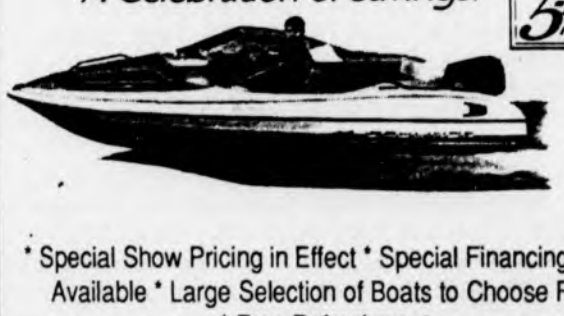
The group will be traveling by two 15-passenger vans to Orland, Maine, on the afternoon of Sunday,July 29 to begin a week of "hard labor" for H.O.M.E. Emmaus, Inc.; returning to Cohasset late afternoon on Saturday, Aug. 4. H.O.M.E. describes themselves as:



"A community of people who are concerned for the welfare of the citizens of this world. By combining our skills, abilities, resources and determined hard work, we have committed ourselves to the improvement of the well being of the earth's poor. Each of us is committed to helping first those who need our help the most so that they in turn can help others. We realize that only by helping others can we strive to reach our full potential."

The group will be involved in such things as helping on new home construction, fire wood collection, and gardening. Our "living quarters" will find us cooking our own meals in a small kitchen and sleeping n the floor of a classroom.

The first fund-raiser for the project was a car wash-a-thon where we solicited pledges for the number of cars we could wash in four hours. We then washed the cars for free (donations accepted, of course!). We washed 104 cars and have collected over $1,000 for the event.



An up-coming fund-raiser will be our second annual yard sale, to be held Saturday, July 7, at the Second Congregational Church on the Common in Cohasset; from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Donations will be accepted for the sale, which can be dropped off at the church between 9 a.m. and noon, Monday through Friday. For other times or to have large items picked up, please call the church office to leave a message at 383-0345. A good response will bring the group close to the total project goal of $4,000.

Day of deliverance

"Yesterday," wrote John Adams to his wife, Abigail, "the greatest question was decided which ever was debated in America; and a greater perhaps never was, nor will be, decided among men.

"A resolution was passed without one dissenting colony, that these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent states.

"The second day of July, 1776, will be the most memorable epocha in the history of America. I am apt to believe that it will be celebrated by succeeding generations as the great anniversary festival.

"It ought to be commemorated as the day of deliverance, by solemn acts of devotion to God Almighty. It ought to be solemnized with pomp and parade, with shows, games, sports, guns, bells, bonfires and illuminations, from one end of this continent to the other, from this time forward for evermore."

John Adams, the first of four presidents to be born in what is now Norfolk County on the South Shore of Massachusetts, was off by two days. The Declaration of Independence was adopted by the Continental Congress on July 2 but it wasn't signed until July 4 and that is the day that has been solemnized with pomp and parade.

Now, 214 years later, the guns have been mostly silenced by court rulings, the bonfires have been reduced to a flicker by conservation laws, illuminations have gone the way of the horse and buggy and other little solemnizations are being whittled away by lack of interest and lack of funding.

But John Adams' basic premise remains: When the Continental Congress opted for independence for the 13 British colonies, indeed "the greatest question was decided which ever was debated in America; and a greater perhaps never was, nor will be, decided among men," and in some ways it is being recognized more on foreign shores than in the land of its birth.

The American Declaration of Independence set into motion a chain of events that is still being felt today in areas of the world that were blank spots on our maps in 1776.

For better or for worse, the French people revolted against the tyranny of Louis XVI in 1789; the people of Haiti against France in 1804; the Mexicans against Spain in 1821; the Russians against the czars in 1917; and the struggle for freedom and independence still goes on today in South Africa and eastern Europe.

All these events, and probably others to come, drew at least part of their inspiration from the debates and resolves that took place in those early July days in 1776.

For many Americans the Fourth of July is just another long weekend in which to sneak off to the beach or the mountains or to work around the house and yard or curl up on the sofa with a six-pack and the ball game on TV.

Perhaps the patriotic thing to do this week of Fourth is to spend some time thinking about what we have and why we have it.

Not everyone enjoys the gift of freedom. It's won at high cost.

This summer, the Recycling Committee urges us to compost our kitcken and garden wastes.

Chittim cites value of vocational schools

To the Editor:

The attached clipping from the Mass. Assoc. of School Committees tells an excellent story about the value of a vocational-technical education and the substantial academic program that is included in it.

In Cohasset we under-use the opportunity for many of our eighth graders who go through high school and into the work force without any trade training.

MASC has given us permission to reprint this article and I hope that you can do so.

David Chittim
Coh. Rep. - So. Shore
Regional School Comm.

MASC Bulletin May/June 1990

By Thomas F. Markham, Jr., Superintendent-Director of the Northeast Metropolitan Regional Vocation High School.

This letter is in regard to the article on Charles Stuart which appeared on page 13 in your January 22, 1990 issue of Time. In the article, the writer stated that Mr. Stuart attended Northeast Metropolitan Regional Vocational School in nearby Wakefield, "A school for boys who weren't college material." The reference to a vocational/technical high school in such a manner has done a great disservice to the 9.3 million Americans who are enrolled in secondary public vocational/technical education programs.

Since the inception of vocational/technical schools, such facilities have frequently been misrepresented as a learning center for those individuals who perhaps did not meet the criteria necessary for admission to a college or university. Quite the contrary.

Although statistics show that greater than ten percent of the students who graduate from vocational/technical high schools go on to further their education at a school of higher learning, this should not be taken as an indication that the remaining 90 percent of the students who do not enter college do not have the qualifications necessary for admission. The American Vocational Association reports that 60 percent of all high school vocational graduates enter some form of postsecondary education and that the learning gains in basic skills are approximately the same for students, whether they are enrolled in academic, general, or vocational programs in high school.

What sets vocational/technical high schools apart from traditional high schools is that while they are attending a vocational school, the students acquire skills in a variety of areas: welding, cosmetology, data processing, commercial art, automotive technology, graphic arts, culinary arts, health care technicians, among others. These skills prepare the students for positions in the workplace which the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics predicts will account for 80 percent of the occupations and will account for the largest number of new jobs by 1995. At the conclusion of their senior year, the students receive a high school diploma as well as a vocational certificate in their area of study.

Please note, too, that although vocational/technical high schools were once primarily for Boys, (that stereotype, discrimination if you will, was rendered obsolete over 25 years ago.) Northeast Metropolitan Regional Vocational School has been coeducational since it opened in 1970. Northeast Metro Tech, as well as every vocational/technical high school in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts is co-educational. (At the present time, there are 59 such schools in Massachusetts—26 regional, 30 local, and 3 county vocational schools.) Nationally, the statistics show that enrollment in vocational education is almost evenly divided among male (47 percent) and female students (53 percent).

Vocational/technical high schools have produced some of the finest students at colleges and universities throughout the country. They are as well rounded as their counterparts who graduate from traditional high schools. The difference is that the vocational/technical school graduate has the option - and the skills - to select a future in the working world or go on to higher education. There are countless graduates who have started their own successful businesses utilizing the skills they learned in their respective areas of concentration.

Scholarship winner thanks the Mariner

To the Editor:

I would like to thank the Mariner Newspapers Inc. for the scholarship award of $250 presented me during our Senior Class Night at Cohasset High School on Thursday, May 31.

As I mentioned on my scholarship application, I am planning to attend Babson College in September and appreciate your paper's financial support as I begin my college education.

Again, thanks so much for selecting me as the recipient of the Mariner's scholarship award.

Special to the Mariner

Maybe it takes sitting next to a relative living with a water emergency (California, Pembroke) to make me realize what a water waster I am. Maybe it takes visiting someone whose water bills have soared (Boston) to realize the value of water; and maybe it takes seeing a community whose wells are closed because of polluted water (Holbrook) to realize the pricelessness of fresh, clean water. It is always time to be conscious of how we use and abuse water; so this week I've included some water conservation tips and strategies that work and are cheap and simple to do.

OUTDOOR WATER TIPS:

Lawns: I think it should be mandatory that before we get our marriage license, we complete a course on lawns. We care so much about them and yet we do so much wrong to them.

A. Prepare lawns properly.

Many lawns require more water than they should simply because they were seeded on improperly prepared soil beds. Grass needs 3-6 inches of very good top soil. Rich loam, composted leaves (available free at the RTF), or peat moss will hold moisture and allow for good, deep root development.

B. Fertilize only when necessary.

Fall and spring are the best time to fertilize. Summer fertilizing is a waste of money, time, and toxic chemicals — here's why: new grass is encouraged to grow requiring more water. This in turn causes shallow roots which become chemical and water dependent. This also developes thatch. Next the salesman will be around telling us we have to put fungicides on the lawn because of the fungus that developes when the lawn can't breathe.

C. "Give it a rest," advises the Mass. Water Resources Authority (MWRA). Your lawn will naturally "fade" in the hot, dry part of Summer. May I recommend a day at the beach, or a trip? The lawn doesn't need you right now. The grass needs to grow 3" tall to shade the roots, so you'll be mowing less in July than you were in June.

D. Raise the blade on your mower 2 1/2-3 1/2 inches or more.

Longer grass retains moisture longer because it shades the roots preventing evaporation.

E. "Water one inch a Week."

Lawns need no more than one inch of water a week and that includes rainfall. After a heavy rain, you may not need to water for 10 to 15 days.

F. Never water when it's windy, rainy, or hot.

G. Never water faster than your soil can absorb the water. Avoid puddling and run-off.

I. If you have an irrigation system, make sure it is efficient: Set timer to water in the early morning or evening once a week. Shut it off when it rains, or install a rain sensor (tensiometer).

Gardens: Weed and mulch flower and vegetable gardens. Mulch retains moisture. It can be simple like grass clippings or more formal like pine bark mulch, cranberry or cocoa hulls.

Cars: Have bucket with soapy water for first wash on car. Rinse sparingly. Car-Washes actually recycle some of the water and therefore use less water per car than the average home owner.

Walkways: Use a broom instead of the hose to clean walkways.

Greywater Systems: This is simply setting up a system to reuse wastewater from the washing machine, bathtub, shower or hand-washing sink and to channel it to irrigate your flower or vegetable gardens. Your local library or the February issue of Garbage magazine have more information.

Next week we'll be focusing on indoor water conservation.

TROUBLESHOOTING at the RTF:

Glass: Please take all metal off glass and clean jars.

As more and more towns recycle, the demands for a purer product escalate. Glass is a commodity not trash. The dealer presently buying our glass at the highest price does not want to accept our product because it is so contaminated with metal. Most of the contamination seems to occur on weekends when the monitors are so busy that they cannot adequately screen all the glass. You can help! Take off all metal especially the metal rings that are on screw cap bottles. This can be done either with wire cutters or a corkscrew by prying the ring off.

Thank you.

Van service will continue

The MBTA's door-to-door van service for people with disabilities — The RIDE — will continue its daily operation in nine South Shore communities thanks to a new contract approved recently by the T.

The new contract will also mean expanded hours of operation, and will mean more RIDE service for eligible South Shore residents in the coming year.

The RIDE is operated for the T by local companies. Service in the southern suburban area will be provided by Kiessling School Transportation, Inc. of Walpole. The nine communities served in The RIDE's south suburban area include: Braintree, Cohasset, Hingham, Holbrook, Hull, Milton, Quincy, Randolph and Weymouth.

Residents of the 44 RIDE communities must register with the T's Office for Transportation Access.

Once qualified, registered users must request a trip at least 24-hours in advance. Service is available 365 days a year. Kiessling will provide service from 7 a.m. to 11 p.m. on weekdays (an expansion from the current 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. operational hours), and from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. on weekends and holidays.

Information on registration for The RIDE program is available from the MBTA Office for Transportation Access, 725-5123 (TDD 722-5415) or 1-800-533-MBTA.

Fewer VoTech accidents

A 47 percent decrease in accidents at South Shore Vocational Technical School was credited to the work of the school's safety committee at Wednesday night's regional school committee meeting.

At the meeting Superintendent Clifford Easton announced that accidents dropped from 149 last year to 80 this year.

He praised the work of safety program directors Joseph Lebherz, a marine biology teacher, and George Hoyt, a graphic arts teacher, and credited them with the results.

A safety committee, overseen by the program, inspected classrooms for safety hazards and distributed safety checklists.

A recent report by school nurse Janice Westberg blamed carelessness as the number one cause of accidents, causing 18.4 percent of all accidents.

Sports activities resulted in 11.2 percent of accidents; improper technique in shop classes caused 12.8 percent.

Fighting and "horse play" caused 15.2 percent, she said.

Easton said when a student is injured they are checked at both the beginning and end of the day.

Resident lauds Laugelle's work

(The following letter was sent to the Mariner for publication.)

Dear Selectpersons:

Peter Laugelle, department manager of the Tree and Park Department, has been his usual cooperative self and once again is deserving of recognition for his efforts in providing the children of Cohasset with safe and green fields for their recreation.

As President of the Cohasset Little League, I can only recount my experiences with Peter. In summary, I know he works extremely hard to provide quality playing fields for our baseball program.

Peter and I meet frequently to discuss the league's plans and to plot strategy for regular season games and tournament games.

His interest in the well being and safety of the children of Cohasset is noticeable to me. I see him at the field observing the play and obviously enjoying what he sees.

Like so many adults in Cohasset, he takes a keen interest in seeing the children developing not only baseball skills but interacting positively in a team environment.

I consider Peter the good will ambassador from the public service employees within the town of Cohasset to our Little League organization.

Let me publicly thank the Cohasset Firefighters for their generous contribution to our program this year. The Firefighters sponsored the Major League Dodgers.

Finally, let me thank the Cohasset Police Patrolman's Association for their generous contribution to our four post season tournament teams.

The support from the public employees in the town has been especially heartening. Thank You.

Sincerely,
John Kinchla

Recreation commission says thanks

To the Editor:

The Cohasset recreation commission would like to extend their gratitude to the following organizations for their very kind donations to the Friends of Cohasset Recreation. The donations will be used to help afford costs associated Playground Program, special activities, on a regenerating, via per capita fees, basis, allowing the principle donations to be used, then reimbursed.

Our thanks go to Cohasset Heights Ltd., The Good Sport, Inc. and the Cohasset Rotary Club.

The recreation commission wishes to express their gratitude to the South Shore Playhouse Associates, Inc. for their continued support of summer Band concerts. Beginning in 1989, the South Shore Playhouse, Associates Inc. assumed the full cost of the town's portion of the concerts and it remains through their generosity that there are going to be three band concerts on Cohasset Common this summer.

The concert dates are: Saturday, June 23, 3 p.m., Tuesday, July 24, 7:30 p.m., Tuesday, August 14, 7:30 p.m. Cohasset Town Common.

Taverna tasties

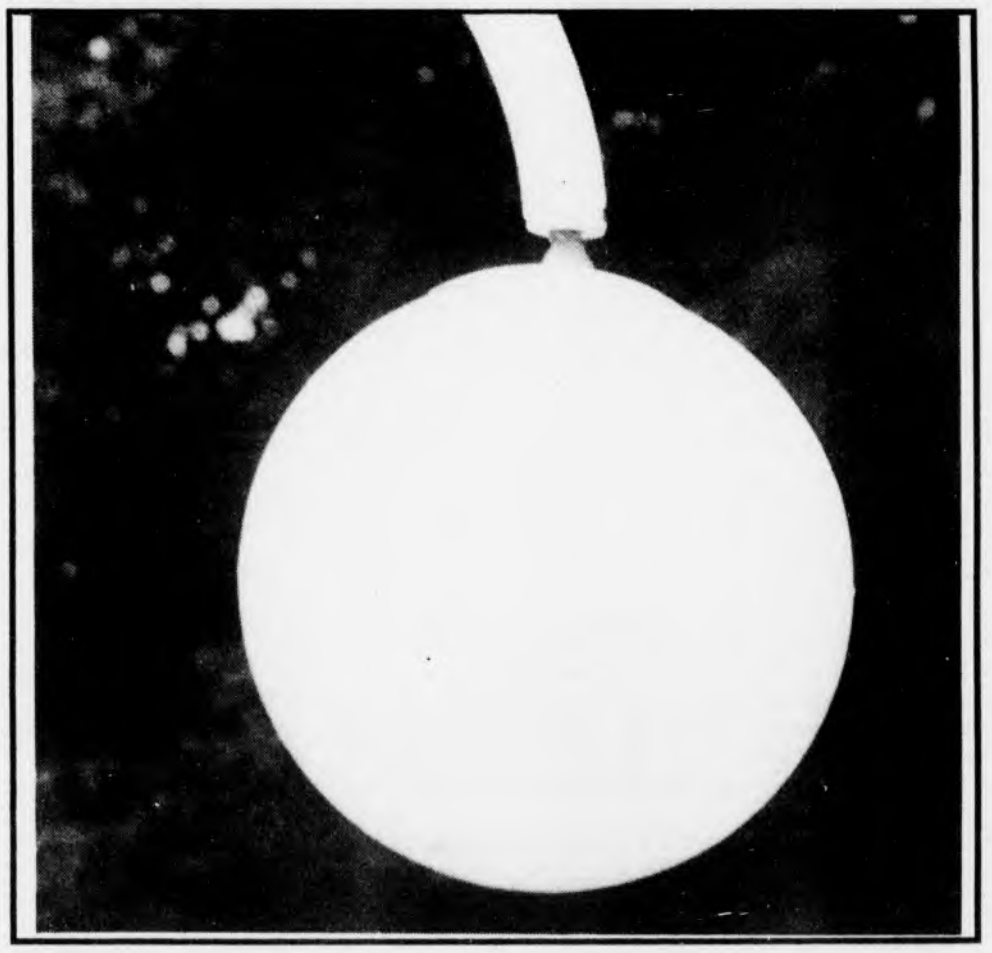
And the food was as sweet to the taste and the music was to the soul.

Even if you by-passed the souvlaki, moussaka and spankopita, who could pass up the honey-sweet desserts. Plate after plate of baklava, galato-bouriko, loukoumades and more left the tent full of goodies. If the names are strange, imagine the most delicate of pastries dripping with honey and and walnuts and you have an idea of the heavenly delights that awaited under the tents. It is not possible to eat too much of a Greek good thing – especially if you may have to wait a whole year to taste it again!

The fair also offered a white elephant table, a boutique and raffles to tempt those who wandered in and out of the tents. Most of the children were accompanied by bobbing balloons from the boutique.



If you missed the Taverna this year, circle July 4 on next year's calendar. The rain and cold were no match for the friendly faces and fantastic fun. The people from the birthplace of democracy really know how to throw a party.

Identify the picture and take your chances on the draw.

Just as the game Trivial Pursuit is a combination of knowledge and a roll of the dice, so is our Photo Pursuit Contest. Test your skills at how well you know the towns of Hingham and Cohasset. Each week we will print a photo of a spot in either Hingham or Cohasset. Clues will be written in the advertisements of participating sponsors.

Identify the photo and have it in to the Mariner Office by noon on Tuesday. All entries will go in to a container, and a Mariner representative will draw the entries until there is a winner. The first right answer will receive the prize of the week.
Prizes will change each week. Every member of the family can submit an answer. It is not necessary to use the coupon.

Participating advertisers are:
Janet's Shoppe, Kings Jewelers, Buttonwood Books, and Santa Fe Trail.

This weeks prize, donated by Janet's Shoppe, is a $25.00 Gift Certificate.

Look for the clues - Good Luck!

Senior Center announces schedule of July events

By Kathy Bryanton
Special to the Mariner

Summertime: Yes, we know that there are gardens to be weeded, lawns to be cut, roofs to be mended, berries to be picked, lakes to be paddled and conversations to be engaged in. Summer is most often an active and busy time, whether the activity is work or play.

But summer also abounds on long, lazy days that urge us to walk instead of running, sit instead of standing, dawdle instead of rushing. Once fully ripe, summer invites us to idleness. The season all but begs us to stop our incessant chatter and listen to more important– the quiet murmur of the brook in the back yard, the sound of the wind in the trees just before a storm, or the absolute stillness that settles over the landscape on those dog days of summer when the sun is so high, the world seems to stand still and the visual rhythm of the ocean and silent hills is a music all of its own.

June 26– Cohasset Council on Aging says "Thanks" at the volunteer appreciation luncheon held at the First Parish House on Tuesday, June 26, for the many wonderful volunteers (both ladies and gentleman) who so generously contributed their time and energy to serve Cohasset seniors. If it were not for these hard working, kind-hearted, giving people, programs like the Tuesday luncheons would not be offered. We would like to say "Thank You" to Rose Kierce, coordinator and all her great helpers!

Luncheons will be served at the Council on Aging building on Tuesdays starting July 3 and will continue to Aug. 28. Donations will be $1.50 per person and reservations must be made 24 hours in advance by calling 383-9112.

Exercise class with Karen will continue during the month of July. The class offers a slow, relaxing aerobic program designed to develop and condition your whole body. For the non-fit, over fifty or those who like to relax while they exercise. The workout ends with a total relaxation routine. If you have been thinking of starting an exercise program just stop in on any Monday or Thursday at 9 a.m. and ask for Karen. Great group of seniors having fun!

The Cohasset Walking Club will meet on Tuesday, Wednesday and Fridays during the month of July and August– Come and join the group. It's fun!

The Friends of Cohasset Council on Aging, Inc.– The Board of Directors announces the following officers for the new year (1990-1991). president, Karin Bartow; vice-president, Susan Connolly; treasurer, Margaret Smart; and secretary, Marjorie Murphy. Members-at-large: Joseph Buckley, Paul Donovan, Peter Logan and Ray Remick. The Board of Directors wishes to extend their appreciation to everyone who volunteered their time this past year to help make the many fundraising events held a great success. The saying "Many hands make light work" is evident as one watches these great people in action planning, coordinating, and implementing activities throughout this past year.

We would like to thank the many, many wonderful people of Cohasset who contributed to this year's fundraising project. Over 160 people donated to the "Friends" for a total sum of $4,230. Without the great help of the friends we at the Council would be hard pressed for monies to cover the cost of mailing and printing the monthly newsletter, the telephone answering machine and the many instructors that teach classes at the senior center. Special thanks to special people!

Remember, new ideas for future fundraisers are always welcome and new faces to help put them together are very much needed. The Friends' Board of Directors will meet in July at the Senior Center, so if you have a great idea, join us at one of these meetings and tell us all about it or call Karin Bartow at home– 383-0572.

Please note: air conditioning will be on at the senior center during the hot days of the summer. We will try to keep the room at a comfortable temperature for everyone, but it would be advisable to have a sweater with you while visiting the center just in case the temperature is too cool for you.

Good old days– There's one nice thing about living in the past; it's cheaper.

Join us for an evening of great fun, music and excitement when the Boston Pops and Victor Borge comes to the Great Woods in Mansfield. Coach bus leaves Cohasset at 6 p.m. and the show starts at 8 p.m. Cost for bus and ticket is $35. Don't delay, the tickets are limited! Call 383-9112.

The Boston Pops and Michael Feinstein at Great Woods on Sunday, Aug. 19, at 8 p.m. This is a first time show when the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra is joined by Michael Feinstein and Ron Feldman, conductor. Call 383-9112.

July Transportation: Remember transportation for Cohasset senior citizens continues to be one of the Council's top priorities. If you need help coordinating rides to appointments, call the Council office and Sue Connolly will be happy to come out to your home and help set up the right type of service for you. Call 383-9112.

Chiropractic for Health
by Dr. Debra M. Tranberg & Dr. Susan Emmer
Chiropractors
HEALTHY PATIENCE
It is usually the specific complaint of a symptom that brings a patient to seek chiropractic treatment. It is then usually the disappearance of the symptom that leads a patient to question whether further treatment is necessary. In between, the doctor of chiropractic has worked to pinpoint the cause of the complaint through a multiplicity of tests. The chiropractor has sought to restore structural balance to that area of the body responsible for poor health. Maintaining good health does not end with the eradication of symptoms. In most cases, symptoms are the last signs of a health problem to appear and the first to go away. They do not give a reliable indication of underlying health. Restoring health naturally to the body often seems like a lengthy process to those who once took pills to "recover."
DR. DEBRA M. TRANBERG, SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, 80 Front St., Scituate, 545-7388, and DR. SUSAN EMMER, CHIROPRACTIC & FAMILY WELLNESS CARE, 87 Sohier St., Cohasset, 383-1330, urge a program of periodic chiropractic exams. In this way existing problems can be addressed, developing situations dealt with at an early stage and even preventive applications instituted so that you may enjoy life to it's fullest. By appointment. Workers Comp. cases and most insurance plans accepted.
P.S. It is the nature of things for the body to take as long in restoring health as it took to create the conditions for disease.

Girls softball strides into halfway mark of season

By Lisa D. Smith
Special to the Mariner

The Cohasset Girls Softball League, comprised of over sixty 5th and 6th grade girls, has just completed the first half of its first season. The League, organized by Rose Collins and Lisa Smith, consists of four randomly selected teams.

The six week long season began on June 6 and will end July 11. Games are scheduled on Wednesday evenings and are played at the Beechwood Ball Park or at Cohasset High School.

The purpose of the program is to have fun as well as provide the girls with the skills and knowledge of playing softball. Most of the girls participating have never played softball outside of gym class, yet their enthusiasm and improvement over the first few weeks has been exciting to see. This in part is due to the fine coaching staff as well as the support and encouragement displayed by the parents.

Next year the Cohasset Girls Softball League wiii be expanding to include 4th grade girls. This will result in additional teams and an extended season. The rosters for the 1990 Cohasset Girls Softball League are as follows:

Orioles cap winning season

The farm league Orioles recently capped a winning spring season. There were all-around stand out performances from Greg Smith, Geoff McWilliams, Ben Kinch, Craig Davis, Danny Williams, and Daniele Gomes. Solid playing and a winning attitude throughout the season were the benchmarks consistently shown by John and David Buck, Lyle Maltz, Kara Gaughen, Jack Jerz, and Emily Coyne. Thanks to coaches, Mike McWilliams, Don Davis, and Jim Kinch for a great season and to all parents for their support.

Yankees look to the future after losing tournament

By John Kinchla
Special to the Mariner

Twelve disappointed Cohasset Heights Yankees trudged off the Scituate diamond after losing the final game of the best of three Scituate Pony League Tournament.

After playing excellent baseball throughout the season, the team suffered an enormous setback when they lost a 3 to 1 lead at the end of the third. Call it fate, bad luck, bad bounces, whatever, Scituate loaded the bases on the Yanks in the third and the runs poured across the plate.

When the Yanks finally came back to bat, they gamely created a rally but they never recovered the lead.

Prospects for the future of this team however are still very bright, as 12 players will be returning next year.

The final score ? "Too much to too little."

The Critical Second Game

Downtown traffic, weak pitching and a porous defense contributed to nine first inning unearned runs and a loss for the Cohasset Heights Yankees in the second game of the best of three for the Championship of the Scituate Pony League.

Brendan Kinchla volunteered for his first pitching start of the season, when John Maynard failed to appear due to traffic problems coming home from Boston.

The first inning was agonizing for the Yankees as the Scituate Spensley Chevys pounced on the Yanks for nine runs.

John Maynard started the second inning and the Yanks began to rally. Over the next six innings the Yanks scored nine runs to the Chevys six runs. But it was not enough to overcome the Chevys quick start.

Individual stars for Cohasset were Brian Pattison, who played outstanding ball both ways. Brian fielded and hit well though he is usually the team's left fielder. Clutch utility man Mike Riley came through once again with several big hits to keep the Yanks rolling. He also came in to pitch near shutout relief in the 6th and 7th innings.

Cardiac Chris Kondrat continued to run, hit and field with his usual characteristic intensity. His base running lifted the Yanks back into the game.

Second baseman Pat Reynolds dove, rolled and tumbled after any ball hit near his position. He combined with Jason Crossman, Brendan Kinchla and Brian Pattison on several near double play attempts.

Ed Taylor filled in capably at third base, and together with left fielder Brian Sasso kept several Cohasset rallies going with their bats.

Chris Stevens played well in centerfield and exhibited a fine arm on several plays with Scituate runners attempting to garner third base.

Rightfielder Chris McKenna could not be stopped. He has been playing like a man possessed. At the plate, he delivered several key hits. In the field, he has played flawlessly.

Coach Brian Fahey played everyone in this heartbreaker. Final score, Scituate Chevys 15, Cohasset Heights Yankees 9.

The First Game

Missing three excellent ball players, the Cohasset Yankees still managed to wrestle a win from Scituate in the first game of the best of three championship finals. In this game, the Cohasset Heights Yankees won a thriller. The biggest hit of the game, was created by the smallest player on the field. Second baseman, Mike Riley, hit a bloop single over the first baseman in the Cohasset half of the seventh inning to cap a 15 to 14 Cohasset win.

The Yankees led early in this game, as John Maynard pitched Cohasset through four innings. Behind Maynard, the game appeared to be all-Cohasset. Cohasset sailed through six innings and built what appeared to be a substantial lead. Scituate came out firing in the top half of the seventh. In that inning, Scituate's offense emerged and proceeded to score seven runs on the porous Cohasset defense.

Cardiac Chris Kondrat, (usually the steadiest of the Yanks) relieved John Maynard at the beginning of the sixth, but couldn't close the door on the Cohasset win. Instead Scituate pulled even at 12 to 12, then went ahead.

This set the stage for a Cohasset comeback. Pat Reynolds singled, Brendan Kinchla singled, John Maynard singled, Chris Kondrat singled, Brian Pattison singled. By this time, the score was tied with the bases loaded.

The diminutive Riley then stepped to the plate, seconds later the game was over. Cohasset Yankees 15, Scituate 14.

The Semifinal Results

Saturday, June 23, Chris Rolandelli and Chris Kondrat struck out a combined 15 Scituate batters as they powered the Cohasset Heights Yankees into the Championship Finals of the 11 team Scituate Pony League for Senior Little League ball players.

The Yankees have been playing intensely all season and with this win they have culminated a season-long goal.

The Yankees received clutch hitting from Chris McKenna, who led off the attack with a solid double to centerfield. Brendan Kinchla had two hits. John Maynard played spectacularly in centerfield. Brian Pattison slapped a double and played well in left. Mike Riley was steady at second base and recorded several hits. Andy Kamataris has played all season at shortstop and recorded another good game there. Peter Fahey made some fine putouts at first base and contributed a solid two RBI single in the third inning. Ed Taylor and Jason Crossman contributed in the late innings to ice the win. Pat Reynolds, now fully recovered from injury, should see action in the Championship Finals.

MAJOR LEAGUE ACTION WEEK 8 REPORT

Alco Oil Players of the Week Awards went to Greg Stevens. Greg pitched the Leo's Exxon Red Sox to the Championship of the Cohasset Major League Division. Over six innings, Greg limited the Dean Witter Mets to two runs for his team's second consecutive Little League Title.

Leo's Exxon Red Sox, led by the Alco Oil's Player of the Week, pitcher Greg Stevens, overpowered the Dean Witter Mets by a score of 4 to 2.

Stevens fired away over six innings, while the Mets failed to capitalize on several excellent scoring opportunities throughout the game.

Semifinal Results

The Leo's Exxon Red Sox eliminated the Cohasset Firefighter Dodgers in a semifinal game of the Cohasset Little League Playoffs. The Red Sox finished the regular season in first place and thus played the number four Dodgers. The final score of this squeaker was 4 to 3.

The Dean Witter Mets beat the Spensley Chevrolet Athletics in a slugfest 19 to 18 on Sunday, June 26. Three Mets pitchers, Eric Henry, Ely Kahn and Taylor Devin were needed before the Mets prevailed.

The Mets vaulted into the Championship round of the Cohasset Little League Final by defeating the National Abatement Pirates on Tuesday, June 26.

Members of the Giants were: Dan Brennock, Charles Toppan, Sean Cogill, Larry Adams, Rob Moody, Josh Flanagan, Ryan McWilliams, James Drybanski, Brian Hurley, Bill St. Croix, Pat Ridge and Jacqueline Hurley. The team was coached by Lot Bates and Bob Moody.

Farm League Action

The members of the Cohasset Farm League teams all played their last games on Saturday, June 22. The conclusion of the season caused anguish and disappointment for some farm leaguers. One parent stated that their child "lived all week for Saturday morning."

ORGANIZATIONAL MEETING

The next Coaches, Board and Parents Meeting will be held at the Deer Hill School on Thursday July 19 at 8:30 p.m. to discuss the evaluation and selection of Major League Players for the 1991 season and for the selection and election of Little League officers also for 1991.

Sailing club offers lessons and fun for all

By David McKee
Mariner staff

So you are young and want to learn how to sail but don't have a boat and can't swing the couple grand to join a yacht club.

Well then the Cohasset Sailing Club is just for you.

For a $90 family membership fee and $50 for class instruction, children ten years and up can get sailing lessons three times a week at Government Island in Cohasset for the rest of the summer.

And once proficient at sailing, these young sailors and their family members can sail whenever they want during the summer.

"This is a very inexpensive way to learn how to sail," club commodore Ray Kasperowicz said. "This club was founded in the late sixties to provide an opportunity for children in Cohasset to learn how to sail. Not everyone has the money to join a yacht club. And it provides an outlet. If the kids like the water this gives them a chance to learn a skill they can use for the rest of their lives."

Currently the program offers instruction for more than 120 Cohasset youngsters.

Kasperowicz said that beginning and intermediate sailing instruction is being made available for adults in addition to instruction for children.

LEARNING BY DOING

Kasperowicz should know how well the program works. In '78 he took lessons himself. He now competes in races and is the executive director of the club.

Roger Crafts is the vice-commodore who is in charge of training.

And Brian Cooke, a teacher from Deerfield Academy, is the head instructor.

"The kids that like it really like it," Kasperowicz said. "But some are not that interested. But all we are offering them is a chance to learn how to sail. Some of the kids who have taken lessons at our place have gone on to compete at the collegiate level. Others did not compete in college, but still sail all the time."

Sports

GETTING OUT ON THE WATER

There are four training levels for instruction at the club.

The first level is able seaman. This is for those who are very young.

The second level is mate.

The third level is skipper.

And the fourth level is sailor master.

Classes are held two or three times a week, according to Kasperowicz.

And during those classes, "the kids learn everything from seamanship to sail trimming, to the basics of the flying spinnaker," Kasperowicz said.

Once the children become proficient at sailing they no longer need to take classes and can take out a boat whenever they want during the summer.

The Sailing Club began instruction in late June and runs until Labor Day.

Kasperowicz said that sailing competitions within the club for all different age and skill levels will be getting underway later this month.

In addition to having competitions within the club, Kasperowicz said that he is hoping to line up competitions with the Hingham and Cohasset Yacht Clubs.

Anyone interested in information about the Cohasset Sailing Club can call Kasperowicz at 383-9158.

Chief's too busy to deposit checks

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

Town officials were stunned when they learned recently that Fire Chief Daniel Brock has been holding ambulance reimbursement checks dating back to November 1989.

Brock revealed the information at the selectmen's meeting of July 9. He turned the checks over to the town treasurer-collector's office Wednesday morning. Although no actual figures were available, officials said the unprocessed checks could total as much as $36,000 based on the average number of ambulance runs over the eight-month period.

Brock was unavailable for comment Wednesday morning.

Brock told selectmen he was holding the checks because the town refused to purchase computer equipment to automate the ambulance billing system.

"I have no time to handle it," Brock explained.

Selectman Diana Kornet's response was succinct.

Bob Beale gets better

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

Nine years ago, Bob Beale had the world on a string. Back home it was a cold and snowy January, but the Cohasset High School graduate with the Paul Newman-blue eyes was working on a shrimp boat under the warm Florida sun. Life was just about perfect.

The next thing he knew, it was May.

"I woke up in Mass. General Hospital. I looked down and only saw one foot," Beale said. "When I felt the stump with my hands, I just started crying."

What Beale did not know was that he had been hit by a car. When he was flown home to Massachusetts, he was in a coma that lasted for five months. In addition to losing his leg, he suffered a hole in his heart, a bruised liver, broken bones and a head injury. Had he not been injured near Cape Canaveral with its state-of-the-art trauma facilities, he would not have survived the accident, his mother said.

Just getting back to Massachusetts was a challenge. Because of the severity of his medical condition, he could not be airlifted by a commercial airline. Jean Beale was getting quotes of $10,000 for medical air transport.

Somehow, noted attorney F. Lee Bailey learned of the family's plight. He provided his private jet and the medical attendants to bring Bob back home.

"Mr. Bailey called me when the plane was over Washington, D.C. to tell me to head for the airport," Jean Beale said.

When he finally left Mass. General at the end of May, he was moved to Braintree Rehabilitation Hospital. He received speech therapy, physical therapy and learned how to get around in his wheelchair. Then he was sent home.

But Beale didn't get to go back to Florida and the shrimp boat job he loved. He didn't even get to go back to Cohasset. He moved into a small house in North Scituate with his mother and tried to get used to being handicapped.

For three years, his one link to life was a social program through the Braintree hospital. Every Tuesday he got together with other young adults. They had lunch, went to the movies or bowling and tried to pick up the pieces of their lives.

In 1984, one of his friends in the social program

Senate debate draws no blood

By Jane Lane
Mariner staff

It wasn't exactly a bloody battle, but there were a few direct hits during the recent debate among Democratic candidates for the state senate.

The debate, sponsored by the Democratic town committees within the Norfolk/Plymouth County district, was held in Scituate on June 28. The four candidates participated - Robert Ambler, John Creed, Bill Flynn, and Brian McDonald. And although it was equal time for all, candidate Flynn reserved most of his remarks for Ambler, repeatedly attacking him for his "flipflopping" views on abortion.

From the start, Flynn began a tirade on the question of abortion which endured throughout the debate. "It is," he stated, "the number one moral issue of this century." Flynn, a state representative from Hanover who recently moved to Weymouth to campaign for the state senate, said he has stood his ground on the controversial issue. He is firmly against abortion, and has repeatedly voted against legislation to ease restrictions.

Ambler, Flynn charged at the outset, has flipflopped on this issue. "It raises the question of whether he is worthy of your trust and your vote," Flynn stated.

Ambler, believed to be an early frontrunner in this crowded race, was on the defensive during much of the debate. He told the audience that Flynn has repeatedly used "half-truths" in his attacks, noting that he altered his stand on abortion in response to his constituents, where pro-choice is the predominant view.

Creed, whose remarks throughout the debate were quick, pithy and direct, told the audience, "I am the best candidate." His priority as senator would be to provide support for public education.

A member of the Marshfield School Committee, Creed opposes abortion and capital punishment He favors the extension of the Old Colony Railroad and he believes the state should send back 40 percent of its revenue to cities and towns.

McDonald, a Weymouth selectmen and past president of the South Shore Coalition, said he has been a leader in the effort to revive the Old Colony Railroad and the on-going fight against the proposed Clean Harbors incinerator.

Church gets break

The Second Congregational Church broke ground for their new addition July 9. According to spokesmen, the addition will take $400,000 and 90 days to complete.

Citing previous precedents, selectmen waived the $2,500 building fee for the addition. Selectmen also gave permission for the construction company to park its trailer in the town hall parking lot behind the garage. The church will provide insurance coverage to protect town property from any damage.

The construction company and the church will need to get authorization from the zoning board of appeals to leave the trailer on town land beyond 30 days.

Committee seeks member

If you want to help maintain the flavor and integrity of the town of Cohasset, the historical commission has an offer you can't refuse.

Following the resignation of Patricia White Murphy, the historical commission is seeking a new member.

Members of the commission have worked on the Minots Light reconstruction project, organized celebrations in honor of the lighting of the Minots Ledge Light House, provided educational programs for school children and supported the historical integrity of the town.

Residents interested in preserving the character and historical assets of the town can call Executive Secretary Gregory Doyen at 383-0220 for additional information.

Wire dept. shorthanded

With the Superintendent of Wires Stephen Wigmore out of commission due to knee surgery, inspections and investigations have hit a major bottleneck.

Selectmen directed Executive Secretary Greg Doyen to talk to the advisory committee and personnel committee about authorizing a temporary increase in staff.

The only other staff person is assistant superintendent Richard Gallo who was reduced from full time to 20 hours per week in an economy move earlier this year.

"There is no coverage from Wednesday afternoon to Monday morning," Wigmore said. "We're going to get into an emergency situation. You've got to get the coverage."

Wigmore told the selectmen that state law mandated that inspections be made within 24 hours of a notice being filed. Renovation work at the Chart House Restaurant alone is keeping Gallo jumping. Wigmore expects to be laid up for another three to four weeks.

Doyen will ask the committees to increase Gallo from 20 to 40 hours for the duration of Wigmore's recuperation. According to Wigmore, there is sufficient money in his overtime account to cover the full-time position until he gets back on his feet.

The Chart House Restaurant came another step closer to opening day when selectmen granted their license requests.

The restaurant now has a license as common victualler, Sunday license for the sale of frozen desserts and ice cream and an entertainment license for both live and non-live entertainment. Selectmen approved a liquor license for the establishment previously.

The Chart House plans to open the extensively renovated and redecorated premises in early August.

Chiropractic for Health

Chiropractors

THE PROBLEM CHILD

The hyperactive child is a source of concern to both parents and teachers. His disruptive behavior at home and at school is usually beyond the control of any authoritative figure. His compulsive agression may be coupled with such other characteristic behavior as constant arm and leg motion, impatience, unpredictability, a short attention span, poor coordination, and/or poor sleeping habits. All these symptoms suggest a physiological problem rather than a behavioral one. When parents turn to traditional medicine for answers, the child is likely to be prescribed tranquilizers or stimulants. The chiropractic approach, on the other hand, does not rely on drugs to control behavior. The chiropractor views the overactive child's problem as one of neurological disorganization. His interest is uncovering the source, not masking the problem.

Chiropractic goes directly to the source rather than merely address symptoms of a problem. DR. DEBRA M. TRANBERG, SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, 80 Front St., Scituate, 545-7388, and DR. SUSAN EMMER, CHIROPRACTIC & FAMILY WELLNESS CARE, 87 Sohler St., Cohasset, 383-1330, offer a natural and drugless approach to meeting your needs. By improving the natural flow of body energy a natural healing process takes place so that one may achieve and enjoy optimum well-being. By appointment. Workers Comp. cases and most insurance plans accepted.

P.S. When evaluating an overactive child, the chiropractor may also take allergic responses into account.

Russell grows earthy songs for Air Supply

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

Graham Russell, the romantic lyricist behind the songs of Air Supply, took a few minutes from his busy tour schedule to talk about how he and his partner Russell Hitchcock have grown over the 15 years they have been singing together.

Air Supply appears Wednesday, July 18, at South Shore Music Circus. This week they were appearing in Pennsylvania.

Air Supply played the Music Circus before in the early 1980s.

"We liked the area very much," Russell said. He said his partner Russell Hitchcock has been talking about buying property in the Cohasset area.

"He said he'll look while we're there," Russell said.

Air Supply — known for ballads like "Even the Nights Are Better" — stopped recording in 1987.

"We decided to cool out," Russell said. "From 1980 to 1986 we couldn't do anything wrong. It was like a whirlwind. We didn't have time to think about much. Nine months out of the year, we were on tour."

He said he and Hitchcock stopped working so hard in 1987 after deciding it was time to build a homelife.

"We wanted to wait until we had something to say again," Russell said.

Now Air Supply is ready to release its 13th album, "The Earth Is ..."

Russell promised some of the new songs would be included in the Music Circus performance.

He said he's excited about the way the current tour is going.

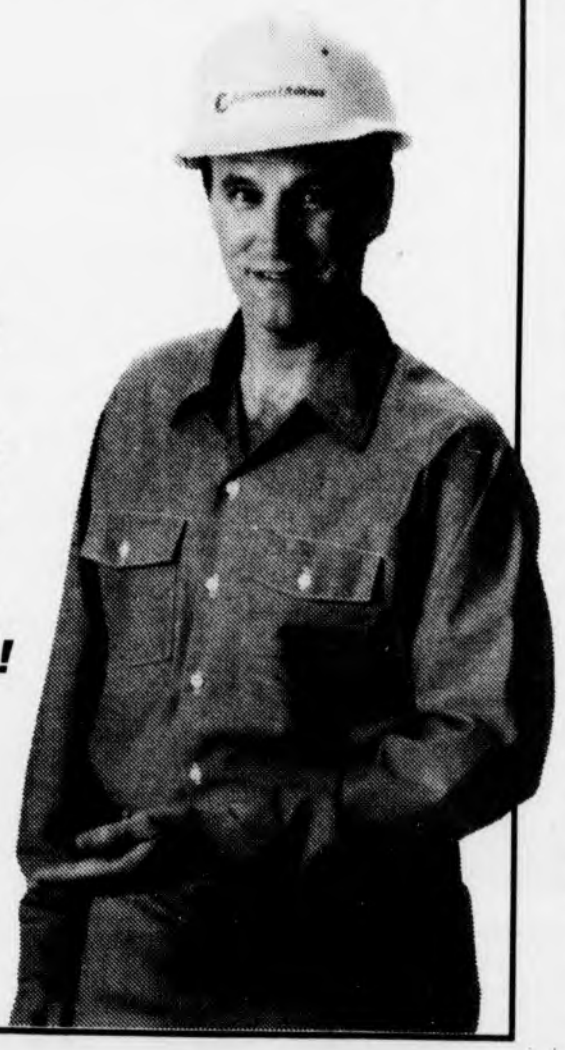
"I think people want to hear voices again," he said. Russell and Hitchcock, who is the lead vocalist, are performing on this tour with a smaller band than they used in the past.

Russell plays his acoustic guitar. Guy Allison is on piano and Larry Antonino is on bass.

"We can rock out with just those few people," he said. "We've been playing to all kinds of houses and people love the show.

"We'll be on tour until July 22 and then go back out in August for a month and that's it for this year," Russell said.

Next year Air Supply will do a grand tour.



"This is to whet people's appetite.

Residents get second chance to quiz MBTA

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

Cohasset residents will have another opportunity to quiz the MBTA on railroad concerns when the selectmen meet again.

Stephen Polechronis and Pam Wolfe have been invited to the July 23 meeting to answer questions about the Old Colony railroad restoration project.

The selectmen's subcommittee on the railroad restoration hopes the answers Polechronis and Wolfe provide will resolve their dilemma. While they support public transit, they aren't sure the Greenbush line of the Old Colony Railroad fits their bill.

The town has until August 2 to file their concerns, questions and complaints with the MBTA.

Last week, selectmen Martha Gjesteby, Jane Goedecke and Ned Tebbetts met with Cohasset's representative on the MBTA advisory board, Louis Eaton, to frame the town's response.

The subcommittee started out with the premise there is a need for better public transportation.

With an ever-increasing number of vehicles on Routes 3 and 3A, selectman Jane Goedecke said, "You've got to get them off the road" both to ease highway congestion and protect the air quality.

Goedecke also wanted the board to go on record as opposing any loss of subsidy to the commuter boats as a result of the restoration of the commuter rail service.

The three selectmen agreed that the board would not oppose to the commuter rail as a mode of transportation providing certain conditions are met.

Those conditions involve guarantees that local communities would not bear a disproportionate share of the capital and operating costs of putting the trains back on the South Shore lines.

One major concern was the project's reliance on large subsidies from the federal government for capital costs. According to Tebbetts, the only commitment the federal government will make is to maintain the current level of funding. Massachusetts will have to dip into federal funds earmarked for operating expenses and improvements to existing lines in order to bankroll the restoration.

"The existing railroad lines have tremendous needs for improvements," Tebbetts said. He worried that that the T would continue to put off essential repairs on the Red Line's signal mechanisms in order to build the Old Colony lines.

All three insisted the MBTA would have to provide specific answers about the effect the Old Colony restoration would have on assessments before the selectmen could support the project.

"It is almost impossible for us to endorse the Old Colony system when the costs are unknown," Goedecke said.

The subcommittee also wants to require riders to pick up a more substantial portion of the cost of the system. Currently, riders only pay about 30 percent of the cost of the service.

Eaton warned that if the cost of a ticket was doubled or tripled, the T would lose riders. The selectmen weren't convinced.

Gjesteby claimed the cost and aggravation of getting from Cohasset to Boston was only the beginning of a commuter's woes. She contended the difficulty of finding and paying for a parking space would make a T ticket a bargain even at twice the cost.

The three made it clear they weren't ready to accept the T's assumptions about the growth of the state economy and the ability of the state to pay increased costs.

They also want information about cost overruns in other mass transit systems built in the U.S. They believe those kinds of numbers need to be factored into the cost estimates provided by the MBTA.

One area where they assume cost overruns will show up right away is in the purchase of the right of way. The MBTA calculates they can buy the right of way land in Cohasset at $10,000 per acre. According to the selectmen, the MBTA will quickly discover that land values in Cohasset and surrounding communities are substantially higher than that.

"There has been a pattern of consistent underestimation of the costs, both capital and operating," selectman Ned Tebbetts said.

Eaton doubted that the MBTA would be able to collect the state's share of the costs.

"The old hanky panky is going on and the poor old MBTA isn't going to make out too well in the current fiscal crisis," Eaton said.

That raised the spectre of local communities being forced to finance an ever-increasing portion of the MBTA bill.

Beyond the financial concerns are a series of local issues.

Residents on Pleasant Street object to the parking lot that will negatively impact their neighborhood and encroach on the wetlands.

In several areas of Cohasset, the train will pass by subdivisions with large numbers of children. The selectmen want the MBTA to re-examine the grade crossings and install barriers to protect the children.

Another safety concern involves the rock at the intersection of Pond and Spring Streets. The selectmen believe it may be necessary to redesign the intersection for safety reasons. Likewise, the selectmen want the T to consider installing a vehicle-activated traffic light at the station on Route 3A.

Gjesteby suggested that placing wood plank fencing along the chain link fence would increase safety, aid in sound proofing and promote a more aesthetic barrier.

Reserving some parking spaces for shoppers and theater-goers was also suggested.

The subcommittee will present their draft letter at the July 23 meeting. The meeting will begin at 7:30 p.m.

Thayer leaves the South Shore behind for Warsaw

By Marilyn Jackson
Mariner staff

For the past three years, Lori Thayer has been the South Shore regional coordinator for the state office of Coastal Zone Management.

She has served as liaison between CZM and local officials as they pursue various projects, such as the long, drawn out plans to rehabilitate the Marshfield town pier.

But this week, she is stepping down from that post to pursue a career far from the South Shore.

On Aug. 4 she will fly to Warsaw, Poland, with a group of 35 other Americans from throughout the United States under the auspices of Worldteach, a private, non-profit organization based at Harvard.

While most of the group will be teaching English as a second language, Thayer, who had asked for a special assignment, will be teaching courses on environmental management at the University of Warsaw and do some consulting for the Ministry of the Environment.

"I don't know a lot of details yet," she said. "Obviously, the country is in a state of flux, so what I will be doing will be more defined when I get there."

She said that Poland, like other eastern European countries, wants to improve its economy.

"Their biggest concern is getting the economy in sustainable shape.

"But real sustainability is also based on the environment.

"Natural resources are as important as human resources and economic resources," she said.

"Sometimes the environment plays second, so it will be interesting to see how the government will deal with this."

The program requires a one-year commitment, she continued. "I'm not sure whether I will finish in May or in August or stay longer.

"I'm playing things by ear. And I could extend my stay," she said.

Thayer said she has traveled through most of western Europe and has visited Istanbul, but she has not visited the eastern bloc countries.

"When I was in college, I wanted to live and work in Africa," she mused.

"But those plans fell through."

"Now, 10 years later, I am finally going to live and work abroad."

Thayer, a native of Farmington, Maine, graduated from Amherst College where she earned a bachelor's degree in biology.

She completed graduate work in urban policy and environmental management at Tufts University and just has to write her thesis for her master's degree.

But that is on hold while she is in Poland.

She has begun to learn Polish, which she describes as a difficult language, and will undergo an orientation program once she arrives in Warsaw.

Also, she will take classes at the university.

Thayer was introduced to coastal ecology while she was serving an internship at CZM during graduate school.

She said she will miss the South Shore but is pleased with the heightened awareness residents share about the environment.

"There is a whole trend of focusing on the environment. People have been swept up in general by Earth Day and a number of other events that have taken place," she said.

Last April, she organized a meeting of South Shore residents to solicit ideas about managing coastal resources.

"Out of that meeting, I hope there will be a continuing effort to address regional planning issues for the coast."

Tangentially, the federal Environmental Protection Agency designated Massachusetts Bay as a national estuary last spring and pledged $5 million during a five-year period for use to promote the preservation of the bay.

Thayer said several consulting firms have been hired to carry out that effort.

Wallace Floyd Associates of Boston will do public outreach, while other firms will collect data to monitor water quality, currents and different resources.

The goal is to look at local zoning and evaluate their effectiveness in protecting the environment, she said.

At CZM, she has seen several South Shore towns improve their waterfronts through the Coastal Facilities Improvement Program.

Scituate and Hull rebuilt their piers a few years ago, and Hingham has a new boat ramp. Duxbury recently built a new pier under the program.

Marshfield has two projects — the pier and the harbor park.

"The town still has a contract with CZM for rehabilitating the pier," she said.

But as part of that agreement, the town must restore the salt marsh.

Under a highly unusual variance, CZM granted Marshfield permission to relocate a portion of the salt marsh to enable the construction of the town pier access road.

"The town has just completed planting the salt marsh," she said. "ōw the town must make sure it holds.

"And," she added, "the town has nearly completed its application for the various permits associated with the pier project." Thayer provided much needed technical assistance during the permitting process.

There have been a lot of delays, she observed, "but the town definitely has moved along."

More recently, she has been working with the waterways committee in developing a pier management plan.

In another CZM project, she worked with Weymouth officials to help them secure a grant to develop a management plan of the Back River, she said.

Decision due on repair bill

Selectmen opted to send their request for a transfer of funds to repair the failing septic system at Government Island back to the advisory committee for action.

The advisory committee took no action on the initial request, telling the selectmen they wondered whether the town ought to be in the landlord business and what the total cost of repairs at the duplex would be.

At the June 25 meeting, selectman Diana Kornet and selectman Chairman Rocco Laugelle were appointed to a subcommittee to study the fate of the building and its septic system.

"Rocky and I are convinced regardless of whatever else we do, we are going to have to repair the septic system," Kornet said.

Although some concerns had been raised about excessive amounts of water being used by tenants in the town-owned duplex, Laugelle said those concerns did not remove the need to make the necessary repairs.

The advisory committee will now have to vote on whether to transfer $6,275 from the reserve fund so the repairs ordered by the board of health can be made.

Previously, advisory committee chairman Ray Kasperowicz told the selectmen the committee would deny the transfer.

Under state law, landlords must maintain septic systems in working condition.

Collector's office hours cut

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

Town residents won't be able to drop by the treasurer/collector's office to pay their bills whenever the spirit moves them anymore. Beginning July 18, the office will close for half the day on Wednesdays to process paperwork.

According to a memo from treasurer Elizabeth Ripley, staff cutbacks have resulted in a serious backlog of paperwork. Ripley sought permission to close the office to public transactions all day on Wednesdays.

Selectmen empathized with the treasurer's plight, but did not want to inconvenience residents any more than necessary.

Selectman chairman Rocco Laugelle proposed the half-day compromise.

"We've got to provide the service even if we cut staff, he said.

Selectman Diana Kornet supported the full-day proposal.

"It's about time the average citizen saw a consequence in cutting back staff," she said. "They can't have their cake and eat it, too."

Selectman Gjesteby was less concerned about the effect on the general public and more concerned about the operations of town hall.

"It's going to put a burden on other offices," she warned, saying other offices would have to field the phone calls. Gjesteby also saw a risk of a domino effect.

Executive secretary Greg Doyen didn't see that as a problem.

"I did do an informal survey of the other offices," Doyen said. "Quite frankly, they didn't have too strong a feeling about it."

Laugelle said the selectmen could only deal with each request for non-public work hours as they came up.

In other business, the selectmen:

• Granted permission to Curtis Liquor Stores, Inc. to pledge their liquor license to Baybank.

• Granted two one-day liquor licenses to the Cohasset Dramatic Club for a celebration July 20 and 21.

• Voted to allow the National Sclerosis Society to use Sandy Beach parking lot in connection with their bike tour Sept. 23.

• Awarded the contract for repairs to the fire department's aerial ladder to E.J. Murphy Co. of Woodville in the amount of $10,470.26.

Philosophy concerns school committee

The school committee has three areas of concern in the proposed high school philosophy statement.

The committee will take up the wording of possible changes sometime before school starts.

John Leary, high school guidance counselor, warned the committee Monday night that any substative changes would set the whole process back.

He said changes in wording could be brought back to the faculty for a vote when school gets underway.

Nancy Sandell, school committee member, suggested the wording of the general goals on foreign languages. She suggested the wording be made more specific, stating (under the heading: Understanding foreign languages) that a Cohasset High School education should provide students an opportunity to study the customs of other cultures and to develop in depth reading, writing, listening and speaking skills.

Ralph Kidder, school committee member, wanted something included in the five pages of philosophy that would talk about expected student outcomes.

While Leary pointed out wording in the summary statement that addresses the point of basic skills, Kidder sought something more specific.

Christopher Ford, school committee member, brought up his concern about the area called "living arts" — shop, business and home economics courses.

There is no wording on that area in the proposal.

Ford said he feels that area is being neglected.

Wording on all three points will be worked out over the next few weeks.

The philosophy statement is being prepared as a part of the upcoming school accreditation process.

New school texts approved

Two new foreign language text books were approved by school committee Monday on the request of Latin and Spanish teachers at the junior/senior high school.

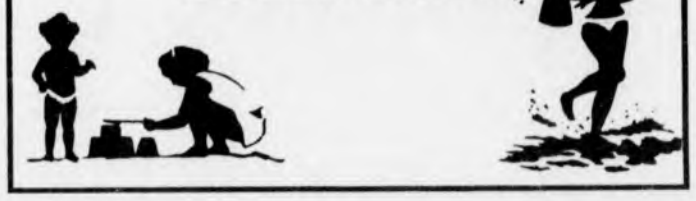
The new Latin text replaces a 1964 edition used by grade 7, according to Tom O'Neil. Only 15 texts will be purchased and O'Neil expects the softbound text to last 10 years.

The Spanish text, "Voces Y Vistas", will serve grade 7 and 9, according to George Fortin. The new text replaces a 1979 book which has less emphasis on the spoken language. About 50 to 55 of the texts will be needed at a cost of $26 each.

School tuition hits $4,247

Tuition students in Cohasset schools will pay $4,247 for the next school year. There are two non-residents registered to date.

School committee approved the tuition figure Monday night, noting that the rate for last year was $3,986.



School committee member Christopher Ford pointed out that it costs less to go to UMass. He said tuition at UMass is $3,400 a year.

Editorial

A fine prohibition

The board of health is getting ready to ban all forms of radioactive waste – including radioactive material deemed to be below federal regulatory concern – from being dumped at the recycling/transfer center.

That's a fine idea.

We would hate to see radioactive medical waste (as useful as the diagnostic devices are) or even the dirty laundry from Edison's Pilgrim Station being heaped into the transfer station.

We aren't sure the regulation can easily be enforced – especially if we are talking about old smoke detectors or the sort of crockery that registers positively on a Geiger counter.

But it's easier to figure out the exceptions to a rule after it's in place.

And this is certainly one area where the adage "Better safe, than sorry" comes immediately to mind.

Radiation isn't something to be toyed with.

We have no idea whether the existence of the Pilgrim Nuclear Power Plant affects the health of people living nearby.

The state has been working for years to come up with cancer statistics for the towns around the nuclear power plant.

It's just good sense to prohibit the dumping of radioactive material here – at least until we know for sure how much radioactivity it takes to affect the quality of human life.

Parking problems

The Chart House is looking for a parking lot – somewhere near the Harbor, preferably something spacious enough to accommodate the expected crowds.

Maybe in this economy the new owners of the waterfront restaurant can pick up a tract of land at bargain prices.

Somehow it seems unlikely that even in the present shaky economic climate there could be any land near the Harbor suitable for the work.

We think the idea of using Government Island has got to be a joke.

If the town wanted to make money parking the cars of tourists and would-be beach-goers, it could have gotten into the business of parking long ago. It might work in Hull as a revenue-producer to rent town-owned parking spaces along the beaches, but our waterfront neighborhoods are our most precious treasure.

We are sure the renovations inside the old Hugo's will be, as the new owners say, something worth waiting for.

We are just as sure that many of the diners will have to wait because their cars will probably be parked somewhere near Route 3A.

Perhaps valet parking will work for the Chart House.

Maybe the Chart House might even consider using some quaint old vehicle – like a Rolls or a trackless trolley – to shuttle the patrons from a distant lot to the Harbor. If it was done right, the shuttle could be am added piece of interest.

We feel certain the new owners must have been thinking about the parking problems and the possible solutions over the months the restaurant has been closed for renovations.

Railroad wins some local support

Letter

(The following letter was submitted to the Mariner for publication.)

To Stephen J. Polechronis:

The Greenbush line of the Old Colony Railroad was running when we moved to Cohasset and it was wonderful. We remember no complaints about grade crossings nor other hazards. More children ("baby boomers") were in school then than now.

In fact, it was a sad day in Cohasset when that plucky little train tooted its last and threw major breadwinners and taxpayers off the train and into high stress commuting.

The South Shore is the only direction out of Boston in which you can't take a train. Many executives want and need to live in suburbs such as Weston, Lincoln, Needham, Newton, and the towns of the North Shore where there are regular trains. Rail commuters live predictable lives. They can relax, read, prepare for meetings, sleep or even play bridge, arrive home refreshed -- with time, energy, patience for evening meetings and town affairs. We know this because our fathers did it until ages 71 and 87 respectively.

But the South Shore commuter has to travel by his/her wits in top competitive form, running a gauntlet of hazards, arriving at unpredictable times. He/she leaves earlier or later than everyone else; seeks little-known back streets trying not to get lost; is ever vigilant for Expressway accidents, breakdowns, tie-ups, crazy drivers, closed lanes, detours, the drawbridge. If using the T, he/she has to get there before the lot is full; wait in windy cold, stand all the way, suffer delays, disabled trains, arrive home enervated. If traveling by the infrequent bus service, wait out in the cold, get stranded. We did all of the above for about two hours every working day for 19 years.

Take the boat, people say. Not to Cambridge -- that's three T changes.

What will happen if they dig up the Artery? We understand there are more than a hundred houses for sale in Cohasset -- many upscale. Who's going to buy them? Who's going to move here and support schools, arts, sports, provide taxes for town services, if commuting goes from bad to worse?

We sympathize with people who bought houses or use property close to the railroad right-of-way. But one has to remember that that has always been the railroad right-of-way and they took their chances. We have to consider the big picture, the long-range good of the town, and restore the railroad.

Unions endorse Ambler

The state primary is fast approaching and Rep. Robert Ambler is picking up support in his bid for the senate in the Norfolk/Plymouth district. Ambler recently released a list of over 25 labor organizations which have endorsed his candidacy.

The list encompasses a broad variety of occupations and reads as follows: Massachusetts AFL-CIO, Norfolk County Central Labor Council, Building and Construction Trades Council of Quincy and the South Shore, Building and Construction Trades of Brockton and vicinity, professional Firefighters of Mass, Mass. Police Association, MDC Police Patrolmen's Association, Boston Police Patrolmen's Association, Service Employees International Union, Local 254, Office and Professional Employees International Union, Local 254, Office and Professional Employees International Union, Local 6, Local 369, U.W.U.A., Local 104, IBEW, Pipefitters, Local 537, Carpenters, Local 424, Mass. Organization of State Engineers and Scientists, International Brotherhood of Printers and Allied Trades, Local 391, Local 2222, I.B.E.W., Millwrights, Local 1121, Local 2313, I.B.E.W., Bricklayers and Allied Craftsmen, Local 52, Sheet Metal Workers Local 17, Plumbers and Gas Fitters, Local 12, Local 103, I.B.E.W.

"It is overwhelming to receive such broad based support. This type of recognition lets you know that you're doing something right," Ambler said.

Dapper O'Neil backs Bryan

By David Johnson
Mariner staff

"Just because he's a Republican, he's still an American," said Boston City Councilor Albert "Dapper" O'Neil, a Democrat, as he campaigned on Route 139 last week for Republican congressional candidate Jon Bryan.

"In our society there's too much of this foolishness," he said. "If a Republican files something, Democrats won't go along."

Bryan is challenging Congressman Gerry Studds and O'Neil is heading up Democrats for Bryan. July 3, O'Neil joined Bryan and a group of supporters holding Bryan signs and waving to motorists on the Pembroke-Marshfield line, in Plymouth, Hingham, Hull and Scituate.

On Route 139 they appeared to get a good response, with passing motorists continuously waving or tooting.

O'Neil lambasted Studds for voting against the proposed Constitutional amendment to prohibit flag burning, saying the vote is "a slap in the face to veterans."

A veteran himself, O'Neil said he won't let voters forget the issue.

In what could be construed as a reference to Studds' homosexuality, O'Neil called Bryan "a good family man," who would make "an outstanding" Congressman.

But the election, "is not a question of Mr. Studds' personal life," O'Neil stated.

He said that social engineering programs and high levels of federal spending are the issues which will defeat Studds.

"I am a conservative and not a cute social operator as these social planners are. They have got the greatest country in the world torn apart," O'Neil said.

He said he can't understand the periodic protesters on Boston Common calling for more freedom. "Freedom from what?" he asked. "This is the freest country in the world."

O'Neil denied charges that he is a carpet bagger from Boston interfering with South Shore politics. He has owned a summer house on White Horse Beach in Manomet since 1955 and has plenty of friends in the area.

"The people who left Boston because of forced busing and high taxes came down here," O'Neil said.

As he has campaigned with Bryan throughout the South Shore, O'Neil said he is constantly running into Boston people.

A Boston City Councilor for 20 years, O'Neil said his support for Bryan won't hurt among the Democratic voters of the city.

O'Neil twice endorsed Ronald Reagan and supported George Bush in 1988, yet still comes in first in Boston elections. He noted that he hasn't held a fundraiser in 12 years and campaigns on his straightforward views, not with money.

"I'm speaking for people who don't have access to the press," he said. "The silent majority, I speak for them."

O'Neil made it clear he is still a Democrat.

"I've been a Democrat all my life. I was born a Democrat and I intend to die one," O'Neil said. "If I'm with you, I'm with you openly. A lot of people in my business are afraid to take a stand."

And although he needed crutches due to a recent knee cap operation and despite the heat, O'Neil was as good as his word, campaigning last Tuesday in Plymouth, on Route 139 and in other South Shore towns.

O'Neil said that he will be "available for Bryan any time he wants me."

Bryan said the feisty city councillor is helping the campaign reach Democrats.

"It's my goal to get the message to the Democrats," he said.

"The explosion of growth and corruption in government," is the leading issue, Bryan said.

He attacked Studds for supporting the 41 percent Congressional payraise. He said the payraise gave Studds a raise of approximately $45,000 per year, boosting Congressional salaries to $130,000.

This is three times what the average family in this congressional district earns, Bryan said.

He also said the raise increased Studds' pension by $800,000 to $2.8 million.

Bryan said he will not take the payraise if elected and will give the money to district charities instead.

Bryan also criticized Studds for taking money from political action committees. He said 77.5% of Studds' campaign financing comes from PACs.

Bryan does not accept PAC money. He called for PACs to be outlawed. "This selling of government has not only made the voter irrelevant," he said. "But you can link it directly to our economic problems."

Bryan also wants to "shrink government and put resources into the private sector."

He said Congress should tell the "farm subsidy junkies and the defense contractor junkies that their time is up."

Bryan pledged not to raise taxes, saying he disagreed with President Bush's recent flipflop on the issue.

He also said Studds receives $300,000 worth of free mail privileges annually. Studds "can say whatever he wants," in the free mailings, Bryan charged.

As for the fishing industry, Bryan said four major fishermen in New Bedford will be making advertisements for him, to end the "myth" that Studds has helped fishermen.

Fishermen "are aggravated and they're angry" at the state of their industry, Bryan said. "They want a Congressman who is in fact going to work for fishermen."

A former pilot, Bryan is a management professor at Bridgewater State College. He lives in Barnstable.

Cohasset Agrees CARE to Recycle Everything

By Alix White

Indoor Water Conservation:

Now if your mother raised you right, and I know she did, I'm not going to be telling you anything new about water conservation.

You already know to turn the water off when it's not being used. Many of you probably know people (mostly women) who carried water from a well to nourish and clean their families. You can be sure that they did not waste a drop.

Water should be as valuable to us as it is to the women who must carry it vessel full by vessel full into their homes from the well. But it's not is it? Heck no, somehow when it gets mysteriously pumped into my home, I start using it as family therapy: the half hour teen-age shower, the meditation with the water on while I do the dishes, the five minute moment on an island while the water laps gently at the shore — gee, I was only brushing my teeth.

We are all guilty; water is simply too easy to use and as a result too easy to waste when it runs from a tap. Here are some easy tips:

1. Be aware of your habits when using water: turn the water off when not using it. Dishes — wash in basins rather than letting the water run. Start the dishwasher only when it's full. Take "sea" showers (turn off water between soap and rinse). Don't flush the toilet needlessly.

2. Install a 1.5 gallons per flush toilet. If your 12 cylinder car is a gas hog, your 5-8 gallons per flush toilet is a fresh water pig. Your payback in dollars on this investment will be short; your payback environmentally will be immediate on fresh water usage and on your septic system.

3. Install inexpensive water saving devices: water-saving showerheads, faucet aerators.

4. Fix leaky faucets, pipes, and toilets. It costs about 15¢ and 1/2 hour to fix a leaky faucet if it's just the washer that needs replacing, and usually it is. Fixing a running toilet is often simply tightening a screw. Keeping your plumbing properly maintained can save you between 75-1,000 gallons of fresh, pure drinking water a week, according to the Mass. Water Resources Authority.

It would be cheaper to hire a plumber to fix all the leaks than it would be to let the fresh drinking water run into your septic system.

Next week we'll be talking about septic systems; until then, don't forget to turn the water off!

Troubleshooting at the RTF:

Trash: Did you know that this past Sunday which was a slow week at the RTF, we filled an entire trailer load with trash for the incinerator? Our average loads to the SEMASS incinerator have been 20 tons — that translates to a cost to the town of $1,145.

How can you help? By reducing the volume of your trash through buying recyclable containers; not buying goods that are over-packaged, and, of course, by increasing your recycling volume overall.

Glass: There has been a huge improvement in this area, especially on cleaning the jars (with just a little water). Thanks. Remember to take the metal rings off.

Boutique: Our favorite shop has moved! Don't panic — it's now just after the tire collection. This is to make the browsing easier, and the traffic flowing more smoothly. There are a lot of bicycles ready for you to trade.

Democratic hopefuls debate

"Two people in this race are longtime Beacon Hill legislators," McDonald said, "and they are part of the problem. "

Rep. Flynn has not yet taken a stand on the proposed revitalization of the Old Colony Railroad. He is waiting for the 45-day public comment period to end, and has many questions regarding the additional $160 million project cost. "When I have some clearer answers I will make my decision," he stated.

Ambler said he too is perplexed by the increasing costs of the Old Colony, and whether it will be financially supported by the federal government. "I think (a solution is) a combination of commuter boats and other modes of transportation, and the expansion of Rte. 3 from Weymouth to Duxbury," he said.

Creed's goal is to get the Greenbush rail on line, acknowledging that without federal assistance it will be "a problem."

McDonald minced no words when he said the Greenbush restoration is "imperative to our quality of life." But, he added, it is not a total solution. And the candidate noted that although Ambler and Flynn have been longtime legislators, "the South Shore still has the worst transportation system in the metro-Boston area."

When asked how much he expects to raise during this campaign, Ambler avoided a direct answer, saying that finances "is not the key to any election." Although he has been criticized for his acceptance of political action committee funds, Ambler said he personally accepts no money, nor does he request it. That, he explained, is done by his fundraising committee.

Creed, whose campaign warchest lags far behind Ambler, believes that money will not be a deciding factor. "I have faith that the voters will have the integrity. The big thing is that they vote for the man, not the money," he said.

McDonald said the issue needs to be addressed, noting that he does not have "the capability of raising funds like Ambler." One political analyst suggested this campaign will cost the victor a-half million dollars. And, that, he noted, is for a job that pays $30,000.

Flynn, taking the charge once again, said that Ambler "has a for-sale on him. He has raised more special interest money in one day than I have in my whole life."

Flynn had asked his opponents to limit the amount of campaign spending. But Ambler, he said, never responded to the suggestion.

It was back to the issue of abortion as Creed, a former priest, was asked if he believes religious officials should direct the public views of elected officials.

He vehemently disagreed that public officials should be excommunicated from the Catholic Church if they support a pro-choice stand on abortion. "It will have a tremendous political backlash," he predicted.

McDonald does not agree with the recent ruling from Catholic officials, adding that he is committed to the separation of church and state. Although he is a Catholic, McDonald said legislators must make all the decisions based on the Constitution and not religious beliefs.

Flynn said the abortion issue is disturbing, because it is taking a human life within the womb - "what could be more fundamental?" he asked. He wondered why the president says he favors human rights - "then why doesn't he speak out on abortion? This is the taking of a human life."

Abortion, Ambler said, is a personal choice, not simply a Catholic issue. The question of legalizing abortion should be decided on the federal level, he said, and religious leaders should direct their attention there.

A questioner from the audience wondered why Ambler had missed hundreds of roll call votes during his 26 years in the legislature.

Ambler rejected that claim, saying his voting record stands at 92 percent. "With my record of accomplishments, I could not do that without being there," he said.

But this was a chance for Flynn to attack, and he did not disappoint. He noted that in 1987 Ambler was present for a salary increase vote, and supported that measure. Flynn opposed pay hikes in 1982 and in 1987.

Creed said he had missed only three meetings during his nine years on the school committee in Marshfield, while McDonald took pride in his attendance record as a Weymouth selectman.

The two-hour debate will be broadcast by Continental Cablevision on Friday, July 13 and Friday, July 20 at 9 p.m. on Channel 53.

No solution found for insurance

Even though Cohasset received a 60-day extension of benefits from Blue Cross/Blue Shield, the town's woes aren't over yet.

"This is only a 60-day extension," Executive Secretary Greg Doyen cautioned. "It certainly solves no problems. It just gets us over the hump."

Doyen said the open enrollment period when employees can switch health care coverage without penalty has been extended. He praised the efforts of Sally Lincoln from the treasurer's office and Patricia Ryan and Joseph Buckley of the Council of Aging's health information service. With their help, all employees and retirees have been contacted and provided with the necessary information for making their health care decision.

The big disappointment was that only two bids were received for replacing Blue Cross. Neither bid met the town's needs.

One bid came in from Hartford Insurance Company. They offered to provide medical coverage to retirees only. Although the coverage was comparable to the Medex program, all eligible persons would be required to sign on with the Hartford and no active employees would be eligible.

The other bid came from Harvard Community Health Plan. It is a health maintenance organization program that duplicates the HMOs currently offered. The town needs to find a Blue Cross-style indemnity plan.

Doyen told the selectmen that both bids were declined. Once the final figures on enrollments have come in, the town will either extend the bid process or rewrite the specifications and send the health coverage out to bid again.

The board also received a letter from the Council of Aging, suggesting that the town utilize the health insurance program offered through the American Association of Retired Persons.

Doyen said that although there are problems with the AARP program, it is worthy of consideration.

The major problems with the AARP program are that it is not an indemnity program and provides individual, rather than group, coverage.

For the town, the AARP program would generate considerably more paperwork for the already-overburdened treasurer-collector's office. However, the cost is comparable to or represents a savings over the Blue Cross rates.

The Coyote howls with universal recreation

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

Riddle: How do you fit an entire universe inside a subcompact car?

It's all very easy when you travel with the Great Spirit and Old Man Coyote. Just ask the troupe from the Perishable Theater of Rhode Island.

"The Coyote Stories" was the first of the recreation department's summer special events. If this is any indication of the quality of things to come, the special events are not to be missed.

The four actors showed up at town hall's auditorium with boxes full of what appeared to be odds and ends of fabric, sticks and bits of fur. Before they were done, they had created water and earth, named all the animals and brought fire to the new people. They also made a house full of children laugh uproariously.

The production adapted -- and "cleaned up" in some cases -- the traditional Native American stories about Coyote. Coyote has been called a trickster, imitator, shape-shifter and clown. Coyote was also charged with responsibility for taking care of the humans and teaching them everything they would need to know to survive. But at heart, the stories were told to amuse and entertain.

The Perishable Theater continued that tradition in fine style. Through words, music and creative, if minimal, props and costumes, they brought Coyote and the rest of the animal tribes alive. The stories were adapted with wit, charm and sensitivity. The original music and songs were also special. "The Coyote Stories" contained a lullaby that ranks as one of the prettiest and most soothing ever sung.

Coyote was played to perfection by Michael Thibeault. The other actors shifted identities from story to story. Maggie MacMillan, Kate Lohman and Paul Boyer gave each animal its own personality. The fun they had with the production kept the audience in rapt attention.

Coyote asks the great spirit for a new name. Maggie MacMillan holds the sun and Kate Lohman holds the moon while Paul Boyer as the voice of the great spirit tells Coyote (Michael Thibeault) that all the names have been taken except his.

Rabbit (a.k.a. Maggie MacMillan) is stuck to the tar doll, but she will soon trick Coyote (Michael Thibeauil) into exchanging places with her during the Perishable Theater's production of "The Coyote Stories."

Like traditional folktales from many different cultures, the stories hinge on the foibles, frailties, and foolishness that that prove the peoples of the world are more alike than not.

The Coyote stories teach us that we need not be powerful and strong like Bear and Cougar and Eagle to prevail. Even Mouse and Rabbit and Mudhen have their role to play. For the smaller animals, determination and quick-thinking often outwitted the mighty and strong. Likewise, being gullible and greedy often got Coyote in a pickle. The Great Spirit was wise when she gave Coyote the gift of immortality. Like the gift that keeps on giving, Coyote had to call himself back to life frequently.

Nothing is forever. Immortality was a gift that was withdrawn when Coyote's work was done and the new people, the Humans, could survive on their own. Since mere survival can be pretty grim, the Great Spirit told Coyote at the beginning of the show, "Laughter is the greatest of all gifts." Perhaps that is why cultures are known best by the stories they tell and the songs they sing.

The Perishable Theater tells stories and sings songs with the best of them. With luck, they'll carry through on their promise develop an adults-only dinner theater version of the Coyote stories.

If you are looking for great entertainment for your children, call the recreation department at 383-6791 for a calendar of the summer special events. There are plays, magic shows and all kinds of special treats at bargain rates in store.

Flying Scot Fleet hosts sailing rivalries

By David McKee
Mariner staff

It may not be the America's Cup, but every Saturday, the members of the Flying Scot Fleet 105 get together to race in Cohasset Harbor off Sandy Beach.

All told 15 Cohasset residents who own Flying Scot sail boats compete in the events that run all summer.

The fleet was founded in '72 and hold competitions every summer.

"It is a social event but it is serious competition," Fleet 105 member Ray Kasperowicz said. "It is a high-level of competition but every Saturday night after the competitions one of the members holds a Tack Party and we all get together and unwind."

Kasperowicz explained that there are Flying Scot competitions held throughout New England every summer.

In August five or so members of Fleet 105 will compete in the New England District Championships which are being held in Rockport.

Next year the New England Championships will be held in Cohasset.

This year on every Saturday since June 9th, the members of Fleet 105 got together and raced.

In previous years only one race was held per Saturday, but this year the fleet will try to get in two races every Saturday.

"We are doing something this year," Kasperowicz said. "Instead of the usual 13 races we will have 20 or so. Plus we have a rule that allows a sailor to throw out his three lowest finishes. That makes it a little more interesting."

The fleet awards trophies to the top finishers at the end of the season. The awards are based on a point average awarded for each finish. The higher the finish, the lower the point total. The sailor with the lowest average is the winner for the season.

George Wey has been the fleets top sailor the last two years. He is looking to go for the hat trick this season.

Flying Scot fleet hosts rivalries...

The races on Saturday cover three to four miles and take between one hour and a half and two hours according to Kasperowicz.

Not all of the 15 fleet members race every Saturday, but the average field is about 11 members.

And of the 15 members, most belong to the Cohasset Yacht Club with the rest belonging to the Cohasset Sailing Club.

Steve Bartow is the captain of the Fleet 105 for this season.

RESULTS FOR THE SEASON

In the first race held on June 9:
George Wey took first place.
Gordon Hishop and Jim Lyons, who co-own a Flying Scot boat, took second.
And Bartow and Jack Brister, who co-own a boat, took third.

In the second race on June 9:
Wey took first place.
Chris Dugan took second.
And Peter Goedecke came in third.

In the only race on June 23:
Wey took first place.
Roger Porter came in second.
And Goedecke finished third.

In the only race on June 30:
Bartow and Brister took first place.
Wey grabbed second.
And Goedecke came in third.

The results from the first race on July 7 are not finalized yet due to a starting error.

But in the second race on July 7:
Bob Jackson took first place.
Bartow and Brister came in second.
And Hishop and Lyons came in third.

"The season is still young and the championship is wide open," Kasperowicz said. "There are many fine sailors and just about anyone could win the thing."

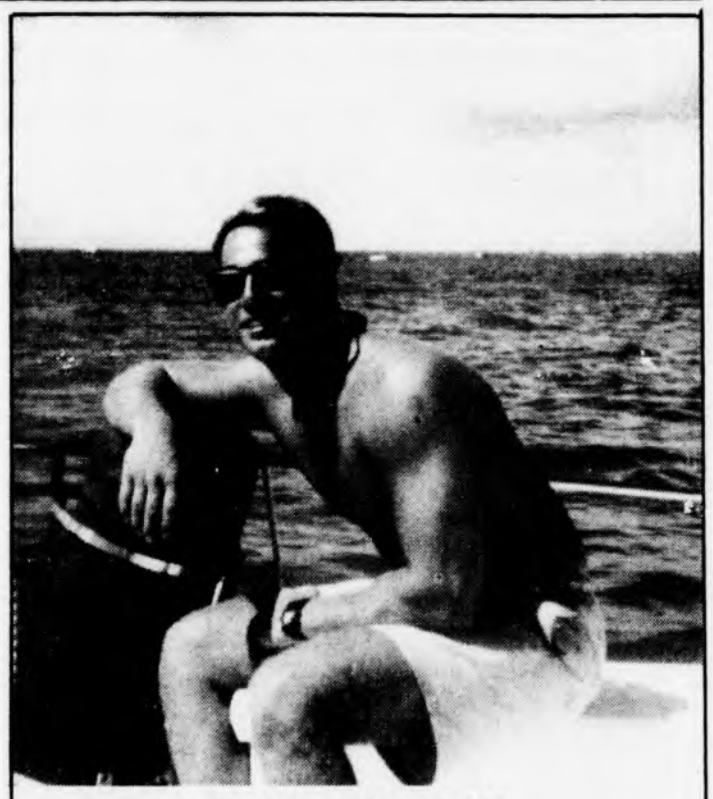
Tournament honors John Lanata

Following the recent tragic death of Johnny Lanata, 19, of Cohasset on June 10, the Scituate Harbor Marina renamed its annual fishing tournament.

The Bluefish Tournament will now be known as the John A. Lanata, Jr. Memorial Bluefish Tournament. The tournament winner will be presented with a trophy which reads "Dedicated to a young man who loved the sea" from "all who loved him."

The tournament was held July 7.



A lifelong resident of Cohasset, Johnny was exposed to boating by his parents, John A., Sr. and Nancy (Giagrando) Lanata. John, Sr. and Nancy were both raised boating. Nancy's father built Waveland Marina in Hull and, though John Sr. pursued his professional career, his love of boating earned him a yacht captain's license at age 17. John, Sr. and Nancy even recall taking Johnny to their sailboat from the hospital three days after he was born. From that day on Johnny, his parents, and sisters, Julie, 23 and Jeanna, 5, continued boating together.

At the earliest age, Johnny's joy seemed to be with boating. His parents recognized his passion and encouraged him to operate and maintain his own boats. In his teen-age years, Johnny influenced his parents to return to power boating from sailing. Hence, in 1987 Johnny's new joy became his 30-foot Scarab Sport named "Re-Entry".

Through his childhood and adolescence, Johnny could always be seen at the Scituate Harbor Marina, either enjoying boating with his family or in maintaining boats of others. His expertise helped him develop a yacht cleaning service. While attending the College of Boca Raton this past year, Johnny traveled weekly to marinas in Fort Lauderdale to maintain several yachts. This business helped with college expenses but these boats became his source of pride as well.

Aside from his knowledge and expertise, Johnny's warmth and sincerity was obvious to anyone who met him. He was very much a part of the marina life. It is only fitting then that this tournament has been named in his memory. He was truly a "young man who loved the sea."

The Lanata family, who will be presenting the trophy annually, wishes to express their deep appreciation for this tribute to their son's memory.

The late John Lanata

Cohasset Little League All-Stars pitch a great season's finish

Cohasset Little League's 12 Year Old All Star Coaches, Jay Caron and Brian Rossi have good reason to be "all smiles" this week as their team played solid baseball in the CHINS tournament last week.

Cohasset's team narrowly missed winning the tournament, when they lost control of their contest with Hingham, the eventual tourney winner.

The Cohasset team beat the Scituate All Stars in a squeaker 8 to 6, lost to Hingham 12 to 9 and then beat Norwell 14 to 8. Finishing the tournament at 2 wins, 1 loss. Hingham had three wins.

The Cohasset team received good pitching from Greg Stevens, Joe Magner, Eric Henry and Jonah Berger. Nevin Bunstien played well behind the plate. Jamie Kondrat and Eli Kahn both played well at second base. Matt Rossi looked good at third, Jonah Berger played well at shortstop. Eric Henry played well at first base.

The Cohasset outfield of Matt O'Connor, Grant Emde and Kenny Leahy sparkled. Matt O'Connor terrorized the opponents with his intelligent running while on the basepaths. Matt, a very mobile leftfielder, played outstanding defense and covered the third base corners and the territory behind the third base bag better than any leftfielder in the tourney. Grant Emde never faltered in rightfield and made two excellent catches on long fly balls. Emde's leaping catch at the fence prevented a 3 run Norwell homer and ended their rally.

Alco Oil Player Of The Week, Kenny Leahy, continued on a tear in the CHINS Tournament with his bat, his fielding and his baserunning. He drove in the go-ahead and an insurance run in Cohasset's 6th inning rally and 8 to 6 win over Scituate. Kenny, Cohasset's lead-off hitter, continued with his torrid hitting in the games against Hingham and Norwell. Kenny also hit his first regulation over-the-fence Little League Home Run last week. He played spectacularly in centerfield and made a ground-hugging diving catch of a rapidly falling fly ball to end the game in Cohasset's 15 to 8 win over the Norwell All Stars. Kenny backed-up and covered the centerfield territory behind second base on steal attempts better than any player in the CHINS tourney.

Ambulance checks pile up

"I'm appalled," she said.

Advisory committee chairman Ray Kasperowicz was equally blunt, but less terse.

Kasperowicz rushed to town hall when someone phoned him with the news. Brock was no longer at the meeting when Kasperowicz arrived.

"To me that is negligence at the least," Kasperowicz said.

He was not impressed by Brock's reasons for holding onto the checks.

"If the chief can handle his own paycheck, he can handle this," Kasperowicz insisted. "I'll go down tomorrow and fill out a bank deposit slip if that's too difficult for him."

In a later interview, Kasperowicz said Brock's failure to process the checks in a timely manner may have a negative affect on the amount of free cash the town can draw from local aid. Town receipts are figured into the tax recap formula, Kasperowicz explained.

The structure of town government committee questioned the wisdom of maintaining a town ambulance service in a report issued before Brock's revelations. The committee said Cohasset could save $90,438 to $140,438 in the first year by contracting with an outside private ambulance service. Committee chairman F. Roy Fitzsimmons characterized the report as a working document rather than a definitive analysis.

The committee also reported that Cohasset did not need to add advanced life support service. According to the report, Cohasset can participate in the Hingham's ALS ambulance service through mutual aid.

Brock took the same figures used by the committee and told the selectmen that privatizing the ambulance service could result in a possible cost to the town of $12,322.

Areas of differences include the dollar amount of benefits, whether the cost of a new ambulance should be prorated over the estimated time the ambulance is in service and whether the town can eliminate eight firefighters if the ambulance service is contracted out.

Brock explained that what he had said was that if eight firefighter positions were cut, the ambulance could not be manned. The reverse does not hold true, he said. Laying off eight firefighter/EMTs would result in a major increase in fire insurance rates for homeowners and businesses, according to Brock.

Disbanding the town ambulance service would also sever mutual aid agreements with other towns, Brock said. Under any circumstances, he said, Hingham's as-yet non-functioning ALS service would not be part of the mutual aid system.

Selectmen want Cohasset residents to have an advanced life support system, but aren't convinced that joining in a regional program operated by a private contractor is the way to go.

Selectman Chairman Rocco Laugelle and Brock questioned the long-term costs of a private ALS service.

The structure of town government committee will continue working on ambulance and fire department issues. The committee is also looking into regionalized animal control services, incarceration programs and equipment purchases. Fitzsimmons said the committee is also exploring the advisability hiring a town manager. The committee meets once or twice a month.

At the same meeting, Doyen revealed that he had gotten to see Cohasset's EMTs at work first hand. Unfortunately, they were working on him.

Doyen collided with a branch, injuring his forehead and an eye. A passerby rushed him to the police/fire station. No one recognized the executive secretary at first as they set about to clean up the blood and get him underway to South Shore Hospital.

For the record, Doyen received 14 stitches and is sporting an enormous black eye, but was on the job before lunch.

Doyen praised the police officers and EMTs who tended his wounds. He also wanted to thank the woman who got him to the police station, but said he neglected to get her name in all the confusion.

Bob Beale faces his handicap

told Bob about the Easter Seals camp in Connecticut. Beale was tired of hanging around home, tired of waiting for something to do, tired of doing nothing.

His mother, Jean, thought the camp sounded like the best medicine for her son. That summer she caravanned to Connecticut so Bob could spend two weeks at Camp Hemlocks.

The two-week camp program gave both mother and son a chance to have some time apart. It has been, Jean said, a godsend. As much as they love each other, they need to get away.

"The time goes whipping by," Bob said. "I wish I could stay longer. It's a great place to be."

A beach bum through and through, he said his favorite activities at camp are fishing and boat rides. Though he spends a lot of time at Minot Beach, the only time he gets to go boating is at camp.

Beale said the camp has an indoor pool and a ropes course. He likes the ropes, but it is difficult since he has limited use of one arm.

"You really need two good hands to do the ropes."

This year he particularly enjoyed the Hawaiian luau and dance. He also enjoyed sleeping late.

Until very recently, the only activity or service available for Bob was the camp program. The Scituate Rotary Club, Kiwanis Club of Scituate and St. Frances Xavier Cabrini all help make it possible for Bob to go.

In May, a head injury day treatment program started up in Taunton. Getting there is a long trip that starts at 7:45 a.m.

"Other than that there's nothing to do," Beale said. "I roll down to the beach. Sometimes I'll roll over to Scituate."

When he says roll, he means roll. Since there is no handicapped accessible public transportation, if he wants to get somewhere he goes by wheelchair.

Beale thinks nothing of wheeling down Border Street to Cohasset or thumbing a ride on Route 3A. His mother just shakes her head.

If you put a magic wand in Beale's hand, his first desire would be to move back the hands of time so the accident would not happen. That's too much magic even for a magic wand.

His fantasy, he said, is to own his own shrimp boat and hire a crew to operate it. If he ever hits Megabucks, that just might work.

Then he got serious. If he could have things his way, he said, "There would be somewhere for handicapped people like myself around this area. A social club where handicapped people from the South Shore can meet other guys and girls.

"And transportation to get there."

You shouldn't have to have a magic wand for something so simple and so right.

Historic walk planned

On Sunday, July 29 the Historical Society will present a walking tour of Cohasset's historic Town Common and center village. Emphasis will be placed on the history of the Common itself and of the buildings surrounding it, as they represent several eras in the history and architecture of the town. Cohasset's village center, once a residential area, today combines residences and businesses. The unique history of its older buildings will be explored during the walk.

The walking tour will meet near the Common's Meetinghouse at 2 p.m. and will end at the Society's Capt. John Wilson House and Maritime Museum on Elm Street in the village. Admission to the walk is free, and all are invited.

Sunday, August 19 is the date of a major Society program event. On that date a charter boat trip aboard Boston's cruise vessel "Gracious Lady" will give tour participants the opportunity to view each of Boston Harbor's three famous lighthouses; Boston Light, Graves Lighthouse and Minot's Ledge Light. Additionally there will be the chance to view Cohasset's renowned Jerusalem road shoreline from the sea.

The special lighthouse tour will leave from the boat dock at the former Hingham shipyard at noon and is scheduled to return there at 3 p.m. Admission is limited to 150 persons, and is $25 for members, $30 for others. Reservations may be sent, with check, to the Cohasset Historical Society, 14 Summer Street, Cohasset MA 02025.

Carillion concert continues

William De Turk, carillonneur at Grosse Pointe Memorial Church in Grosse Pointe Farms, Michigan, will perform a free recital on the 57 bell Jessie M. Barron Memorial Carillon at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Avenue, on Sunday, July 15, at 6 p.m.

Bring your lawn chairs, blankets, and picnic suppers to enjoy on Cohasset Common for this third recital of the summer series. Printed programs are available.

For further information call St. Stephen's Church at 383-1083.

Chowder fest July 15

Taste the best chowders and soups from twenty of the finest South Shore restaurants; and vote for your favorite at the Annual South Shore Chowderfest.

On Sunday, July 15, there will be a soup and chowderfest contest sponsored by the employees and management of Jake's Seafood Restaurant to benefit the Hull Scholarship Fund.

The chowderfest will be held at the Hull Yacht Club located at 1453 Nantasket Avenue from noon until 5 p.m. Tickets are $2 per person and are available at the door of the Yacht Club on July 15.

Community Center courses

Theater dance camp still has openings at Cohasset Community Center. It will provide children, 6-12, an opportunity to explore their creative abilities as they participate in all aspects of putting on a show: from set designs and costumes to singing, dancing and acting. Camp meets Monday-Friday 9 a.m. to noon for two sessions: July 9-20 and July 23-Aug. 3.

Gymnastics Camp at Cohasset Community Center offers girls ages 7-16 an opportunity to hone their gymnastics techniques with extended periods of more personalized instruction. Each day consists of warm-ups, aerobic dance, work on the beam, bar, uneven bars, vault, floor exercises and conditioning. Snack time and bowling will be included. Camp meets Monday-Thursday 9 a.m. to noon for three sessions: August 6-9, August 13-16 and August 20-23.

Gymnastics summer sleepover with Ruthann Sargent provides girls, 7-12, a chance to join their friends for a night of "camping in" at the Community Center. Gymnastics, bowling, contests and prizes, videos, making popcorn and bedtime stories are included. The sleepover is scheduled for Thursday, Aug. 9 at 7 p.m.

Tennis lessons are available on Monday and Wednesday from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. for four weeks starting Aug. 6. Class meets twice weekly for one hour each. Students are grouped by age and ability. Instruction is available for children and adults beginners and intermediates. Call the center for a convenient time.

To register or for further information call Cohasset Community Center at 383-0088.

Conservatory concerts

There are 109 students from twenty-four towns south of Boston enrolled in the Summer Wind Ensemble this year. This music day camp for intermediate and advanced students in grades 7-12 began its 18th season on July 2 at the Hingham campus of the South Shore Conservatory.

On Aug. 3, at the end of the 1990 season, the Advanced Ensemble will premiere a new work by noted composer, David Maslanka, at the South Shore Music Circus. The piece, called "Golden Light," was commissioned by the Conservatory as part of its 20th Anniversary celebration.

The program culminates in a series of performances, which are free and open to the public as follows: July 20 at noon - Advanced Ensemble - Faneuil Hall Market, Boston; Tuesday, July 24 at 7:30 p.m. - Advanced Jazz - Scituate Library, Scituate; Thursday, August 2 at 7 p.m. - Brandon Woods, Hingham and Friday, August 3 at 11 a.m. - Final Concert - South Shore Music Circus, Cohasset. For further information about the Summer Wind Ensemble concerts call 749-7565.

Turn the tide.

The choice is yours.

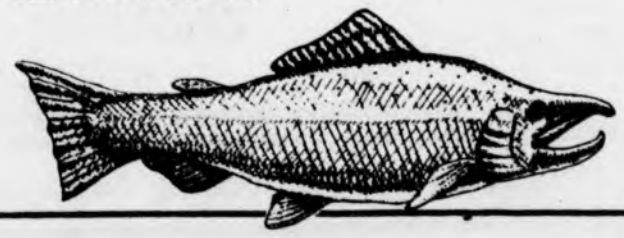
Ten years ago the North River was the cleanest tidal river on the East Coast.

Today it's not.

That's why we're working hard to eliminate the pollution that's finding its way into the river.

Once it's gone it's gone forever.

The North and South Rivers are a resource of which we've all taken advantage. And all the time we've taken from the river—boating, fishing, or simply admiring its beauty—we must put back in. The rivers are experiencing a pollution problem that, thankfully, hasn't gotten out of hand. But it will unless we help. Because of our proximity to the rivers, we must take responsibility for their upkeep. Or the rivers will be gone forever as we know them.



The North and South Rivers Watershed Association: What we're all about.

The purpose of the North and South Rivers Watershed Association (NSRWA) is to be continuously engaged in the preservation, restoration, maintenance, and conservation in their natural state of the waters and related natural resources of the North and South Rivers.

Finding a solution to the current pollution problem facing the North and South Rivers has been deemed the number one priority of The NSRWA. Fortunately, we are attacking the problem at an early stage. The problem as it exists today is serious but not hopeless.

NSRWA needs the community's help. The choice is ours, yes or no. Do we want to continue the life of the North and South Rivers as it is or are we going to let the once-cleanest tidal river on the East Coast turn the way of other rivers neglected by its community?

We hope you will join the NSRWA. The membership fee is very modest. But its impact can be immense. With a little time and effort from everyone, we can turn the tide on pollution in the North and South Rivers.

I'd like to help turn the tide.

New officers of the South Shore Unit of the American Cancer Society for the coming year were elected and awards made for outstanding performance in the year past at the recent annual meeting of the unit which serves the nine communities of Braintree, Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Norwell, Milton, Quincy, Scituate and Weymouth.

Barbara Sullivan of Braintree, who chaired highly successful Cancer Crusade and Auction programs in recent years, was elected president; Rose DiPietro, of Quincy, who headed the public education committee, was elected vice president; Dr. Walter Kagan of Hingham, becomes medical vice president; Cindy Pugsley of Halifax, secretary; and Ben Beres of Quincy, retiring president, will be treasurer.

Awards were made to the following South Shore Unit volunteers:

Barbara Sullivan for her outstanding work as Crusade Chair for the past two years and her active participation in unit activities.

Rose DiPietro for her outstanding work as Public Education chair for the past two years and her active participation in unit activities.

George Baker of South Weymouth, for outstanding contribution to the South Shore unit as public issues liaison, public education volunteer and Jail & Bail volunteer.

She turned them over to driver Joe Buckley, who delivered them to a "jail" in Crown Colony, Quincy, where they bailed themselves out by calling for contributions to the Cancer Society. The "Jail and Bail" project raised a total of nearly $35,000 on the South Shore.

WHAT IS THE RICKY SMITH DIFFERENCE?

PHIL SPALLINO – WEYMOUTH

I have been a customer at Ricky Smith's since 1968, when I purchased my first car which was a GTO. My family has purchased approximately 15 cars at Ricky Smith's. I feel the company is a well run organization & they stand behind what they sell. I can always be confident that when I purchase a car at Ricky Smith's that I am getting a good deal, & that they will take good care of the car.

That is the Ricky Smith Difference.

Selectman Martha Gjesteby wants police and fire connection

Selectman Martha Gjesteby was adamant. If a connecting door is not installed between the fire department and police station, she will not sign off on the renovations.

"I think it's important to have communication between the two departments," Gjesteby said.

Executive Secretary Gregory Doyen said a connecting door appears in the early plans, but was removed later.

"There were no strong feelings between between committee members and the departments to have a door," Doyen explained.

In the past the departments have objected to a connecting door on the basis of safety.

Robert Davenport reminded the selectmen that the police department housed people from time to time that the fire department would not want to have tiptoeing among the sleeping fire fighters.

Why have glass partitions and heavy security at the front door, Davenport asked, if you have an unlocked door out in back.

Gjesteby was not persuaded.

"It makes a mockery of many things," she insisted.

Selectman Diana Kornet suggested a possible compromise by placing the connecting door between staff lounge areas of the two departments.

Renaissance tries to pump up Village

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

The Village Renaissance committee is working on plans to build a water pump of cedar and granite to add charm to the intersection of Elm and North Main streets.

Jacqueline Dormitzer, Renaissance coordinator, said she thinks the project can be handled with about $5,000. Plans for the construction are underway. The next task will be to find the money.

Several dozen people who are interested in the Village project gathered at South Shore Art Center on July 10 to talk about the group's direction.

Several of the merchants in the group suggested they would like help getting beefed up police protection to curb the littering and vandalism.

Some of the women in the group talked about whether the answer to that problem might be to organize some youth activities.

But the prime topic was the old town pump.

The old town pump is referred to in the "Narrative History of Cohasset" by Victor Bigelow.

"As for wells, a little digging almost anywhere in town will tap a good supply of water," Bigelow said in his 1898 edition.

"The reason for this is that the great glacier left a coating of clay and gravel upon our granite just sufficient to hold the rains that soak in, and not deep enough to drop the water below the reach of a pump.

"The glacial deposits someplaces in North America were so deep that the water may seep through several hundred feet before reaching bed

Chief delivers less than hoped for ambulance

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

Fire Chief Daniel Brock is preparing a report for the July 23 selectmen's meeting. The report will explain why Brock was so delinquent in processing ambulance receipts.

According to Exective Secretary Greg Doyon, Brock turned in ambulance receipts totalling $5,661.91 for ambulance runs dating back to November 1989. Approximately $1,300 of those checks were written prior to April 1990.

Doyon doesn't know if the town will have any difficulty with banks refusing to honor the aged checks. He said the town will simply have to wait out the week to ten-day period it takes for checks to clear banks.

Doyon believes that process is already underway.

"I dare say these checks were already in the bank," he said.

Although the billings reached nearly $36,000, Doyon said that the town rarely receives all that is billed. He explained that insurance companies pay only a percentage of the bill and individuals without insurance frequently fail to pay for ambulance runs.

When Brock was asked to explain why he had been holding back the checks, he protested, "Nothing was held back." He would not explain why the checks were not turned over to the treasurer in a more timely fashion.

"It will all be in my report to the selectmen," Brock said.

Doyon also offered no explanation for Brock's failure to process the receipts.

"I'd rather not comment at this time," he said.

Both Brock and Doyon said the department has billed for all ambulance runs through June 30. It is unclear how much more of the $36,000 in billings may be received.

Although the fire department is responsible for billing for ambulance runs, the checks are turned

Minot's Light still spells love

Never in a million years would you guess there was a controversy about who owns Minot's Light while listening to Noel Ripley and Joe Lebherz.

Although the shore station that supported the lighthouse was in Cohasset on what is now known as Government Island, Scituate has always contended that the lighthouse itself was in Scituate waters.

Even though Ripley hails from Cohasset and Lebherz settled in Scituate, restoring the lighthouse is all that matters.

The two men have been overseeing the reconstruction of the lighthouse's watch room on Government Island.

The project moved into another phase when the rotating mechanism was sandblasted, repaired and returned to the structure.

Ahead of them lies patching and replacing granite blocks, setting up the structure that houses the light and recreating the copper dome that topped the structure.

"It's been a labor of love – and a fair amount of labor as well," Ripley said.

The lighthouse had been a real beacon in Ripley's life. He recalled crossing Cunningham's bridge at night on his bicycle as a young boy.

"I could see the lighthouse light reflected on the bridge," he said. He wants to preserve that light for generations to come.

Both men agree the lure of the lighthouse must be rooted in romance, but it's not the romanticism of cloud-scudded skies and ghostly galleons.

They are taken with the challenge the seas and the ledge posed for the ingenuity and skill of the engineers who designed it and the workmen who built the lighthouse.

Rediscovering the construction secrets and solutions has taken the patience and perseverance of a historian.

Lebherz, an engineer by training and a Coast Guard reservist, has been tracking letters and documents that have been collecting dust for a hundred years.

Lebherz is also responsible for taking care of Boston, Minot and Plymouth lighthouses for the Coast Guard. Ripley just calls him "an answer to a prayer."

Their project was kicked off when the Coast Guard renovated the lighthouse out on Minot's

Economic summit draws all kinds

By Kelley Tuthill
Mariner Staff

From a distance I could see the confederate flag waving – the flag of the South, the flag of slavery and the flag of days that I though were "Gone With the Wind."

Then I saw them, the white-robed beacons of white supremacy. Shouting and carrying signs containing words that I never wanted to see in print, they came closer.

I looked with shame at the black members of the Houston Police Force. The men who had to protect the safety of the public, while restraining, I imagine, their own personal feelings.

The police were 300 strong, clad in riot gear and bullet-proof vests.

The protestors were also 300 strong, angrily fighting the idea of white supremacy.

The Klansmen, well, they were only 75 strong. I

Cohasset's week

Tax agents seize Creations

Creations, which once operated at 2 Smith Place, was seized by state tax agents last week.

Signs left in the second floor window of the building which houses several other ongoing businesses say the property was seized by the Commonwealth for nonpayment of taxes.

Local police were called by the state police barracks in Norwell last Friday and asked to stand by while the seizure took place, according to Cohasset police.

The presence of state and local police during a tax seizure is commonplace.

Only one corporation was affected by the seizure.

Board of health tests wells

The board of health has announced that it will be providing water quality testing for all private wells in Cohasset used for drinking water purposes. The tests will consist of bacteriological analysis and certain indicator parameters which could show that a well might be polluted.

The owners of wells that have been registered with the board of health will be receiving letters indicating they will be contacted by a board representative to make arrangements for sample collection.

Persons whose wells are not registered with the board of health may avail themselves of this service by calling the board of health at 383-9900 Ext. 121.

Marrow transplant succeeds

Joel Carpenter, 6, is back at home this week after undergoing successful bone marrow transplant surgery at Children's Hospital in Boston.

Joel, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joel Carpenter of Heather Drive, isn't ready to play with his friends quite yet. He needs to stay away from people with germs while he recovers.

But he was able to see his friends and their families Tuesday afternoon as they gathered at a neighbor's house to celebrate his homecoming.

A group of family friends had arranged the unusual party which was held at the Lewis home.

Peggy Lewis had been ready for the party since last Friday, a day when Joel was originally supposed to be discharged from the hospital.

Dozens of posters greeting the Carpenters, especially Joel, balloons and other decorations were strung from the intersection of Forest Avenue and King Street down Heather Drive to the family's home.

Posters created by Joel's friends contained heartrending sentiments like, "Home is where the heart is."

The inside of the Carpenter home was filled with balloons and glitter.

Joel had been hospitalized for 79 days.

Winner sees the light

He correctly guessed the picture was of the outdoor light at South Shore Music Circus.

For his prize, Reimold won a $25 gift certificate to Janet's Shoppe.

Candidates

Hedlund announces candidacy

Businessman Robert Hedlund of Weymouth formally announced his candidacy for the Republican nomination for state senator at a gathering of supporters last Thursday evening in the Broad Cove Ballroom in Hingham.

He is seeking the Norfolk-Plymouth seat currently held by Democrat William B. Golden, who is running for lieutenant governor.

Hedlund, president of Hedlund Motor Sales Inc. on Quincy Avenue in Quincy, is making his first bid for elected office.

However, he has held a number of positions with the Republican party. He has served as state chairman of the Young Republicans. And he as supported GOP candidates and served as a member of both the Weymouth and Hull Republican Town Committees.

"In 1988 I ran for the only unpledged delegate slot from our congressional district. I won that," Hedlund said.

In his announcement comments before some 200 supporters, Hedlund blasted the state legislature.

"Our economy is in ruins, and what is the response of the Democratically controlled legislature? Yet another tax increase."

"Once again due to fiscal irresponsibility of our entrenched careerist politicians on Beacon Hill, it will be the middle class and small businesses on whose backs the burden of balancing the state's budget will fall," the candidate added.

"We do not have a revenue problem, we have a spending problem" said Hedlund, repeating a favorite campaign slogan.

He cited his decade long active membership in the anti-tax group Citizens for Limited Taxation and his role in CLT's petition drive to place a taxes and fees rollback question on the November ballot.

"We cannot afford another 'back pocket' politician from this district. We must elect a state senator who is independent, honest and willing to forsake political expediency or a concern over a political career and stand up to the special interests," the candidate said.

Hedlund said his supporters include veteran Illinois Congressman Phil Crane, Democratic Boston City Councilor Albert "Dapper" O'Neil and CLT founder Edward F. King.

Anyone seeking more information about Hedlund's candidacy can call the Committee to Elect Robert Hedlund at 740-4920.

Mihos to run for state senate

Cohasset millionaire Christy Mihos has announced his candidacy for the Norfolk-Plymouth state Senate seat being vacated by Sen. William Golden.

Mihos, a Republican who has been considering a bid for the GOP nomination for several months, made it official at a campaign kickoff at the Barker Tavern in Scituate Harbor Monday night.

Mihos is president of Christy's Markets, a family-owned chain of 130 convenience stores headquartered in Brockton. The candidacy marks his first bid for public office.

"There is nothing wrong with the Commonwealth that we can't fix," Mihos told supporters at the kickoff. "However, we need to change the people on Beacon Hill to get the job done.

"With the economy the way it is, Massachusetts is losing good, honest, hardworking individuals who have been forced to leave the state because of economic necessity."

Mihos said that one factor that sets his apart from the field of candidates, both Republican and Democratic, is that he has the capability to offer constituents jobs in the private sector.

"Employment," Mihos said, "must come from the private sector," rather than through public employment.

As CEO of Christy's Markets, which employs more than 1,000 people, Mihos said he would seek out targeted businesses to create a network for finding jobs for his constituents.

Mihos serves as a Junior Achievement counselor at Weymouth North High School and supports and assists the Weymouth Food Bank for the needy.

He serves as a director of the Boys and Girls Club of Brockton and the Genesis Foundation, and on the board of corporators for the Children's Museum of Boston.

He is a member of the Executive Committee for Development for Stonehill College, his alma mater, and is a director for the National Association of Convenience Stores.

The Norfolk-Plymouth senate district includes the towns of Cohasset, Duxbury, Hingham, Hull, Marshfield, Scituate and Weymouth.

over to the treasurer/collector's office for processing. Doyon said he and the treasurer were aware there were problems with the billing process.

Doyon blamed the problem on the loss of a clerical position in the fire department. The chief and his staff had to pick up responsibility for ambulance billings when that position was eliminated.

"There was a learning curve there," Doyon explained. Most of the billings and receipts were generated from April on.

All the checks the fire department received for ambulance runs from November through June 30 have been turned in to the treasurer/collector's office for processing.

Doyon said the chief was working on an improved system of billing and processing ambulance receipts. Brock has agreed to turn in the receipts at least on a monthly basis, but preferably weekly.

Although Doyon and the selectmen have been the recipients of critical phone calls, Doyon declined to say whether the selectmen were planning to reprimand Brock or if they would institute changes in the ambulance billing procedure.

Old town pump restoration

rock.

"The old-fashioned well sweep has always been able to reach the water in Cohasset wells, and pumps have never found a case where the water has been beyond their reach of 30 feet.

"The old pump, which stands at the junction of Elm and Main streets in the center of town, is one of many that have kept man and beast supplied. Generations of neighbors used it, fishing schooners of bygone days had their casks of fresh water filled from its depths, and school children have squeaked more than one pump handle to death above it."

The new pump is being designed for the group by Ben Blake, a retired architect who offered to help.

The plan calls for a structure that will be 14 feet wide and extend about 9 feet into the wide intersection.

"We want the children involved in the project," Dormitzer said.

The pump will be a working water pump. Something people can touch.

The idea is to add to the charm of the Village.

Peter Laugelle has said he would repave the sidewalk near the new installation.

Tennis tournament serves hospital

Rob Whelan never played in the Cohasset Benefit Tennis Tournament for the Children's Hospital.

But he remembers the last tournament clearly. At 15, he was just one year too young to enter the longtime annual event.

"It was the social event of the year," he comments.

That was in 1979 when Jessie Cox was the tournament's prime benefactor. Other contributions would follow her suit as local tennis players spent a weekend socializing as well as competing for charity.

The reception at "The Oaks" on Margin Street is something Whelan remembers.

Once again this year the mixed doubles tournament will fill the 20 plus private courts throughout the town. Sponsors, participants and anyone else interested in contributing are being sought out.

Whelan said he and a few other "Cohasset raised individuals" got together over the last few months to reorganize the event which will be held Saturday and Sunday, Aug. 4 and 5.

He and Joy Pratt are heading up the committee.

He said he's more than willing to help anyone who wants to enter find a partner for the competition.

Entry fee is $85 a team and the competition will be limited to the first 64 teams who send their registration information and the fee.

The money raised by the weekend benefit will go to the AIDS Discretionary Fund at Children's Hospital in Boston. The fund is used to help make life easier for children who've been identified as affected by AIDS.

Mia Graham, one of the tournament organizers, wrote of the need in literature the committee is sending to potential donors.

She pointed out that over 200 children have been evaluated at Children's in the hospital's ambulatory transfusion and treatment center. Over 160 of the cases are ongoing. This clinic at Children's receives two to three referrals a week.

Most of the children come from poorer homes. Many already live in foster care since they contracted the disease from parents who were infected themselves and may either be sick or already dead.

Sometimes the discretionary fund pays for new clothing for the infected child. Sometimes the fund is used to purchase items needed for the child's medical care at home. There have been times when money was used to pay for photo developing "for the family to have as a remembrance," Graham said.

"We're not using the clay courts in town. We've limited play to the asphalt courts for fairness," Whelan said.

The tournament will involve a winners and consolation bracket. All entrants will play at least two matches.

Anyone 16 or older is eligible, Whelan said.

There will be a Saturday night reception for the players and sponsors at the Sailing Club. Finals will take place Sunday afternoon at "The Oaks" which is now the Roy estate.

All matches in the winners bracket will be best of three sets, two point deuce, 12 point tie breaker. All matches in the consolation bracket will be an eight game pro-set.

Trophies will be awarded in both brackets.

Teams may register for the 64 draw mixed doubles tournment by writing the Cohasset Benefit 1990 Committee, 136 Atlantic Ave., Cohasset, 02025, or by phoning Whelan at 241-8970 or 383-0034, or Pratt at 720-4792, or Annie Abbruzzese at 242-9242.

Sponsors may contribute anywhere from $25 to $100 to receive an official acknowledgement.

Zotos teaches youth to love math and science

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

John Zotos is a man with a mission. He is bound and determined to get youngsters excited about math, science and technology so they can pick up where old-timers like him leave off.

Zotos has had a long and illustrious career. His area of expertise is mechanical engineering, materials and metallurgy. His career has taken him from the research laboratory to college classrooms. At a time when many men are enjoying their retirement, Zotos is trying to do more.

He does it against great odds.

Born with a chronic hip problem, Zotos had a total hip replacement many years ago. The orthopedic surgeon who operated on him knew Zotos – and his work – long before he came in for his first appointment because Zotos is one of those rare individuals who benefitted from his own research.

During the war, Zotos worked on refining a titanium alloy for the government. His work allowed biomedical researchers to perfect an artificial hip made of that alloy. Unfortunately, chronic problems with staph infections ultimately led to the removal of his artificial hips.

His recovery took time. Today, he gets around with the aid of crutches and a wheelchair. But get around he does.

He's thrilled to be back in the classroom. Working with students has always energized him. Recently, his son Frederic introduced him to a program called Boston Partners in Education.

Through Frederic's involvement, Zotos has had the pleasure of trying to get innercity youth excited about engineering. He's had students visit his office and tour the facilities at Northeastern so they can see first hand all the career possibilities in engineering.

The experience has convinced him that if the United States wants to maintain its pre-eminence in science and technology, they have to start soon and start young.

Children seem to have a natural curiousity for finding out how things work. They want to take things apart, put them back together again and make them better. That's ingenuity and inventiveness at work.

It's also the spirit that made American the technological leader in the world. Somehow that spirit seems to be on the wane as educators, planners and businessmen proclaim that we are in the Information Age.

Nonsense, says Zotos. Although computers may whir and people may communicate, there will still be a demand for more and better stuff to buy. If we don't make it, build it and refine it, then our competitors will. If you have any doubts, count up the Japanese products you see on the road and in the stores.

"The Japanese are more patient," Zotos said. "They put more money into research and design."

They also, he added, capitalize on American research and ingenuity to turn out a better, more reliable product.

Two things will keep America strong, Zotos said. The first is continued open immigration. He believes the future is in the hands and minds of the men and women who come to this country determined to make a better life for themselves and their children.

"They're the ones who will keep this country going strong," he said. He praised their hard work and their emphasis on the importance of education.

The other hope for America is her children, native and foreign-born.

"We must have an all out effort to turn on American youth to math, science and technology," he said. "We must stimulate, translate and communicate."

He wants to start that process early.

"High school is too late," he said simply. Zotos has proposals he hopes to get funded to get kids hooked on technology.

This week he gets to start small with a program for children being put on by the Museum of Transportation in Larz Anderson Park in Brookline. The program, Auto Design Week, is a series of slide shows and talks about automotive design developed with the elementary and middle school child in mind. It runs from July 25 through 29.

Professor Zotos will speak on the Design of Motor Vehicles: Past, Present and Future at 2 p.m. July 27.

Zotos has lots to say on the topic of cars.

For instance, do you know we drive on the right side of the road?

According to Zotos, you could put the blame on Napoleon Bonaparte. Previously, armies had marched on the left side from Greek times on down. But Napoleon decided his troops would be safer if they marched on the right hand side of the road. Every country that he conquered adopted his move to the right.

The English – you, you may remember, finally defeated Napoleon, stuck with the left side. Having bailed out of England's colonial empire early on, the United States sided with the French on this.

But there are always at least two historical theories for why things happen. The other theory says we sit on the left side and drive on the right because covered wagons had the driver's seat on the left.

Take your pick.

Zotos will also talk about the days when introducing the new car models was hot stuff. Back in the '50s, car companies unveiled the new models with all the hoopla of the Academy Awards. Tail fins got bigger or smaller, chrome was added and subtracted and Americans changed their cars more frequently than their presidents.

Today, we see the basic box year after year. Steel and iron make up 83.3 percent of the vehicle and gasoline powers an internal combustion engine.

Is there anything new on the horizon?

Perhaps, said Zotos. Fiat, the Italian company, has a plastic car in the research and design phase. It's light, cheap to manufacture, flexible and it doesn't rust. Zotos said the car is aerodynamically designed, takes less energy to produce and is more fuel-efficient. But engineers question whether it is strong enough to cope with the speed and number of cars on the road today. According to Zotos, the jury is still out on that one – and selling a plastic car to the American consumer might be difficult.

John DeLorean built a gull-wing car out of a titanium alloy. It was energy efficient because it was so light, but it was not practical. The titanium was chosen because it gave the car a classy, non-corrosive look. But it was horrendously expensive and non-recyclable. It also disappeared from the market faster than the infamous Edsel.

The solar car is not only possible, it's being manufactured. Unfortunately, it's very expensive to build and maintain.

But ultimately the future of the automobile will be in the hands of the children of today. They are tomorrow's designers, engineers and consumers. Zotos wants us to teach the children well.

The Museum of Transportation is in Larz Anderson Park, 15 Newton St., Brookline. The other programs in Auto Design Week are:

- July 25 Dream 'n Draw: The Design Process
- July 26 What's New Under the Sun: Designing and Building a Solar Car & Fueling the Future

All programs begin at 2 p.m. Immediately following each talk, the museum will present a 13-minute film Invention: I Can Do That.

Children are also invited to design and build a prototype car of the future from recycled materials in the Inventor's Workshop which will be open to the public Wednesday through Sunday from 10 a.m to 4 p.m.

Museum hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday through Sunday. Museum admission is $4 for adults, $2 for children, students and senior citizens. Children under three are free. The museum is wheelchair accessible.

For more information, call 522-6547.

BACK TO WORK

It is an unfortunate fact of the workplace that approximately one-third of all job-related injuries involve the back. Fortunately, worker's compensation, provided by employers, is available in all states for the injured worker's protection. Under worker's compensation laws, an employee who injures himself while at work is eligible for benefits. He is entitled to complete coverage for diagnosis and treatment. He is also entitled to a full or partial payment for lost wages. Lastly, an injured worker has the right to choose the treatment that he feels will best return him to wellness. This means that chiropractic care is an option for workers with job-related injuries. Many are recognizing that chiropractic treatment is playing a large role in returning to work those with back injuries.

DR. DEBRA M. TRANBERG, SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, 80 Front St., Scituate, 545-7388, and DR. SUSAN EMMER, CHIROPRACTIC & FAMILY WELLNESS CARE, 87 Sohler St., Cohasset, 383-1330, offer the chiropractic applications that effectively address back problems and discomfort whether as a result from work, play or everyday living. Join our growing list of patients who have discovered it is no longer necessary to endure such discomfort. By appointment. Workers Comp. cases and most insurance plans accepted.

P.S. If a person suffers a back injury in the home, disability insurance (not worker's compensation) offers coverage.

Minot's Light replica constructed with love

Ledge.

The work began in the summer of 1987 following an inspection of the 114-foot high tower that revealed many fractures and cracks in the walls of the watch room.

The top section of the tower was disassembled and stored, and the 42 granite blocks that formed the watch room were taken down and flown by helicopter to Government Island.

The Coast Guard had new blocks quarried in New Hampshire and then painstakingly reconstructed the lighthouse.

The work was not completed until the summer of 1989. At 2:30 p.m August 20, Minot's Light was relit and its famous 1-4-3 signal shone across the waters.

Since Minot's Light is so inaccessible, the Cohasset Historical Commission decided to construct a replica of the watch room so landlubbers could get a taste of the wonder out on the water. Getting the original stone was a rare piece of luck.

The stones were set back in place by Cohasset's resident wizards of duck pond technology, Highway Surveyor Harold Litchfield and Tony Sestito along with a hand-picked crew. Since the individual stones weigh as much as 2,200 to 4,000 pounds, moving them into place was no small feat.

Joe helped solve the problems of the rotating mechanism. Originally the rotation was aided by a drum filled with mercury. But mercury is a hazardous substance. The machine shop at South Shore Vo-tech came to the rescue. They designed and built a bearing assembly to replace the mercury.

The huge structure was also sandblasted and repaired and reinstalled by New England Steel Tank in Quincy. Owners Fred and Mark Koopman have been an essential part of the project. In the process, Ripley and Lebherz estimate they have donated about $20,000 worth of labor, material and free use of equipment and tools.

The project has a tremendous number of benefactors. If it weren't for the help of these individuals and businesses, the watch tower project would be no more than a will o' the whisp in Ripley's mind.

Ripley and Lebherz repeatedly singled out N.E. Steel Tank, Whitman Foundry, Ryerson Steel Company, the South Shore Music Circus, Monti Granite Co., Inc., the Navy SeaBee unit in Weymouth, the Coast Guard Station in Scituate, Gayle Electric Company and the Norfolk County Engineers as the angels who have made the project happen since Litchfield and his men put the stones back together again.

Next on their agenda is patching and epoxy-cementing the broken and chipped granite blocks. Then a steel plate will be installed to which the rails and bracing of the structure housing the light can be affixed.

On the original lighthouse, the plate was made of bronze. Ripley would love to be authentic, but bronze just isn't in the budget. The whole structure will be capped off with a copper dome.

The ornate dome is constructed of 12 panels that curves two or three times and tapers. Judging from the old photographs and drawings, it will be a beautiful sight to see.

"Everything is going to look right," Ripley promised.

The two men said the complete tower would be up by the end of this year. The following year will find the rails and bracing installed.

That is, of course, money permitting.

"We're there hat in hands," Ripley said. He estimated that it will take another $10,000 to $20,000 to complete the watch room project, in addition to the gifts of money, time, labor and materials. that have been pledged.

When they are done, the structure will truly be something to behold. Unlike today's architecture where everything is stripped down to its essentials, Minot's Light is a Victorian delight.

As Ripley put it, the design of the rotating mechanism, the stairways, the railings have lots of "diddly-fiddlies" or gingerbread details.

"You can compare the architectural details with the old brownstones in Boston," Lebherz explained.

While they explained this, they patted the stones and the rotating mechanism. The self-described "lighthouse nuts" really love the old watch room that is springing back to life under their care. And they aren't possessive – there's plenty of room for other lighthouse nuts to get involved.

So look out to Minot's Ledge at the beautiful old lighthouse still standing proudly after all these years. Then venture down to Government Island off Border Street in Cohasset where the old watch room is slowing taking shape.

When you're done, Ripley and Lebherz hope you'll send a few dollars to the Cohasset Historical Commission so generations of Cohasset and Scituate lighthouse lovers can get an upclose and personal look at what life was like out on Minot's Ledge.

Time to dump the ambulance

Some people have questioned whether the town should continue operating its own ambulance.

Fire Chief Daniel F. Brock presented his case last week to selectmen, arguing that the fire department ambulance is the less expensive way to handle medical transports.

He probably had some good points.

We happen to think that running the ambulance service is obviously too time consuming for the fire department.

Realizing that checks for ambulance services have been piling up at the fire station since last November, we can only assume the job is too much for the fire department to handle.

Chief Brock is planning to deliver a report on the undeposited checks to selectmen when they meet again next Monday.

He feels he made his case on keeping the ambulance under fire department control at the selectmen's meeting July 2.

We happen to believe the case isn't strong enough, particularly when the amount of money collected doesn't even reach 20 percent of the amount billed out.

Besides the undeposited checks raise a number of issues:

- Are there more checks that have yet to surface?
- If the $5,661 that's been turned over to the treasurer/collector aren't just a part of the fire department's collection, then where is the other $30,000 that was billed?
- Why did it take so long for the selectmen to find out there was a problem with the financial operation of the fire department?
- Are the channels of communication in existence between the selectmen and their department heads?
- Doesn't anyone in town government check on anticipated receipts?
- Would anyone have noticed if the fire chief hadn't brought up the matter himself?
- If this could happen once, what is to prevent a department head from absconding with his or her collectibles?

Private ambulance services seem to be meeting the needs of large communities in this area. Perhaps it would make sense to consider looking into a regionalized plan and private business.

We are a small community.

Last year the total number of ambulance runs in town was 517. Only 354 persons were transported in the ambulance. Another 144 people received first aid at the scene.

The Cohasset fire ambulance was called upon 82 time to deliver services outside the town through the mutual aid agreement. There were 27 cases when the town actually required an out-of-town ambulance.

Our ambulance and the men who operate it provide a fine and needed service.

We just might not be able to afford to keep an ambulance staffed around the clock to be there for the one person a day who will need it – not if there is another way to fill this need.

The lovely Cohasset harbor will soon be home to the Chart House restaurant which is scheduled to open next month. (PLD Photo)

Radioactivity can't be avoided

Letter

To the Editor:

Your editorial endorsement of a regulation that has been proposed to the health board banning all radioactive waste from Cohasset facilities (even if classified as below regulatory concern by the NRC and its scientific advisers) correctly notes that such a regulation can't easily be enforced. Of course it can't. It would prohibit the burial of human bodies on our cemeteries, for example, because blood is slightly radioactive. It would prohibit disposal of smoke detectors, some glazed pottery, animal carcasses and other common objects that are slightly radioactive.

The proposed regulation stems from the peculiar notion that radioactivity is a horror at any level, despite the fact that mankind always has been bathed in a sea of radiation from natural sources, and despite evidence that low level radiation may be beneficial, perhaps even essential, to life. Of course, high level radiation is dangerous, just as boiling water or pure sulfuric acid is dangerous. But warm water and weak acids like vinegar are not to be feared, and neither should low-level radiation. The average U.S. resident is exposed to about 300 millirems each year, mostly from natural background and partly from medical procedures. Statistics fail to show any correlation between low level radiation and cancer/birth defects. The difference in background levels of radiation between various parts of the nation is greater than the radiation that would be imposed on any individual by disposal of wastes of such low level as to be "below regulatory concern."

Activists claim that experts say that there is no level of radioactivity that is safe. That is false. What the experts really say is that the effects of low level radiation (if any) can't be determined, but might be inferred by extrapolating backward from known effects at high levels. There is much dispute as to whether to postulate the effects by straight line extrapolation backward, or by some variation from a straight line, but essentially the conclusion is that the effects, if any, are extremely small (and not necessarily harmful). See the report of the National Academy of Science's Committee on the Biological Effects of Ionizing Radiation (The BEIR report).

The NRC belatedly has responded to instruction from Congress in 1985 to deregulate very low level radioactive waste, but the response from local government bodies (banning of radioactive waste regardless of how low the level) illustrates the abysmal state of our scientific education. The nation is fortunate in its great resources, but they are not infinite, and tax revenues should be expended in protecting us from real hazards, not from miniscule additions to the natural background level of radiation.

Sadly, your editorial position is representative of the positions taken by much of the media. The opinions of the responsible scientific community (which advises the NRC) carry little weight with the media and hence with the public, compared with the disinformation spewed out by the anti-nuclear industry and cynically or ignorantly recycled by posturing politicians.

The proposed regulation may seem harmless, but the nation is being strangled with seemingly harmless regulations. No regulation should be imposed upon us unless its benefits outweigh its costs, is enforceable and equitable, and makes rational use of scientific fact. Currying favor with articulate and aggressive activists is no excuse for wasting tax revenues on attempts to implement a foolish regulation.

Many other communities and even states are stumbling into it like bemused sheep, but that's no excuse for Cohasset to follow suit.

Fire fighters endorse Rep. Murray

(The following letter was submitted for publication.)

Dear Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray:

I am very pleased to inform you that that the membership of this organization has unanimously endorsed your candidacy for re-election as representative from the 3rd Plymouth District of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Your voting record and leadership abilities have served to improve not only the working conditions of fire fighters, but also the welfare of their spouses and children. Clearly, the fire fighters have a legislator concerned for their well-being.

We are proud of our association with your office. I wish you much success in your campaign and look forward to working with you once again.

If I or any member of the Professional Fire Fighters of Massachusetts can be of any assistance to you, please do not hesitate to call.

Best personal regards,
Robert B. McCarthy

Fire Chief Brock has withheld what may total $36,000 of ambulance reimbursement checks with the explanation that he had no time because the town has refused to purchase a billing computer.

Cohasset Agrees CARE to Recycle Everything

By Alix White

My husband and I had a wonderful vacation on a coastal island this week. Our hosts took us to The Squat and Guzzle, the local island hot spot. It's famous for its very fried clams, coffee hot enough to drink, and most importantly, good conversation. There was quite a crowd assembled by the time we arrived. They were all into Marie's third serving of coffee and homemade toast. Let's see, there were a few Fortune 100's (business men who had made it onto THE list) just up for the weekend. There were fishermen, a boatbuilder, a carpenter, and some writers. They were all talking about the same thing: septic systems. We felt right at home.

It seems that their island is made of granite outcroppings and hard pack clay, just like our town. Since septic systems were mandated some twenty years ago, eliminating the direct sewage outflow pipe into the ocean, the clam beds have diminished. That was the grumbling at the table as we sat down.

"Used to be," complained one of the clammers, "I could fill a flat bottom boat with clams over at the lodge. Now they've gotten so conservation minded with their septic systems and low flush toilets that the clam beds are much smaller."

"Didn't I hear that they were forced to redo that system?" asked my host.

"Oh yes, it was the talk of the town this spring. They spent $50,000 to rebuild that thing. That's why they went to the low-flush toilets. 40 percent of our water use goes to flushing the toilet. They had a big place with lots of guests. It was too much water going into the system," informed the writer.

"Sounds like an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure," drawled the carpenter.

"What kinds of things have you done to maintain your septic systems?" I asked.

"One of the businessmen said immediately: "Reduce the flow of water going into the septic system. After I saw what they had to do at the lodge, I went right out and bought low flush toilets. They should pay for themselves in a couple of years. If I give a large party which we often do, I rent an outdoor toilet. We bought aerators for the faucets and I put a timer on the kid's shower. Hah, I even went out and bought stock in a plumbing company. It should do very well."

"Well you know George," said the boatbuilder, "The thing that saved our system was taking out our garbage disposal. What a mistake that was. None of the solids were breaking down and they were clogging up the pipe to the leachfield. It's all hard pack clay up by me, except for the leach field. I have to be careful not to lose my leachfield. It would be too expensive to replace."

"Actually I have found toxics to be the killer on my system," said one of the writers. "We do a lot of the work on our home ourselves, and we wind up buying a lot of chemicals: paints, solvents, pesticides, acids — all that kind of stuff. We developed a family saying that goes 'nothing in the septic system unless you've digested it first' ".

"Trust you, Joe, to come up with a saying like that," piped in Marie.

"Well think about this for a minute," the writer continued fearlessly. The bacteria is designed to work to break down our waste. If we start adding all these other concoctions, we destroy the balance and nothing works. We've simplified our cleaning supplies to things like baking soda and vinegar. Now when we buy home improvement supplies, we first consider how toxic they are, how much we actually need, and how we are going to dispose of them in the end. Living on an island teaches us to live more simply because we are responsible for everything we bring over here."

"I can't say enough for yearly inspections," said the computer magnate. I have had my local man pump us out every other year. He inspects the system on the off years. It has saved me a fortune. Oh there's Harry now. Right on time to take me to my plane. Nice to meet you. Have a good weekend, and keep that coffee hot, Marie."

I looked out the window and saw the only taxi cab on the island pull up to pick up his fare. On the roof of his cab was his personal ad that read "No tank too rank." I was informed that he pumped out septic systems when he wasn't driving a cab. The way people were properly maintaining their systems I felt he really owed it to his customers to change the sign to: "For the tank that ranks." It was taken under advisement and would be discuss d next time everyone convened at The Squat and Guzzle.

Director of Science Center takes job in New Mexico

By Judy Enright
Mariner staff

Despite a verbal commitment, the recently-appointed executive director of the South Shore Natural Science Center has reportedly taken a better-paying job in New Mexico.

Richard Ashley called Len Bicknell, chairman of the Center's board of directors, at home at 10 p.m. on June 22 to say that an institute in New Mexico made him an offer "that was so far in excess of ours that he had to take it," Bicknell said.

He called Ashley's decision "unethical. I told him that he had made a commitment to us and we were planning on him. I said we had notified the other candidates and called off the search."

Ashley had also been chosen by the Norwell Historical Commission from the applicants who wanted to rent the Jacobs farmhouse. That committee will meet after July 4 to decide what to do about selecting another tenant.

Bicknell said his board has contacted a woman who was their second choice. "Hopefully, she will become our director but we won't know anything for a week or two. She was a good strong candidate and qualified in every respect," he said.

'UNEQUIVOCAL'

Bicknell added that he felt Ashley's original acceptance of the Science Center job, although not in writing, "was unequivocal. There was never any hesitation in his acceptance."

He was "stunned" by Ashley's call, Bicknell said, and by the pronouncement that he will not come to Norwell. "I was actually speechless."

Reached at his New Hampshire home on Sunday, Ashley refused to comment on his future or his decision and said that calls from reporters were "an invasion of my privacy." He said he did not wish to talk to reporters and that a reporter from another newspaper had previously called him.

Ashley was recently selected from among 36 applicants to live in the Jacobs farmhouse, just down the road from the Science Center. The Norwell Historical Commission, according to Chairman Jon Bond, will probably meet the week after the July 4 holiday and decide what action they'll take to find another tenant. He said he does not expect the committee to open the application process again.

Bicknell said there was no formal agreement signed by Ashley, but that he had verbally consented to take the Science Center job, accepted the pay rate offered and established a starting date.

When he called to say he wasn't coming, Ashley told Bicknell that he had "bad news." He said he had taken a job where he could make more money and where the cost of living is less. He said that he had his family to consider.

"Didn't he have family to consider before," Bicknell asked? "He also had three children when he accepted our offer on May 18."

TWO FINALISTS

The Science Center narrowed the candidates down to two finalists and offered the position to Ashley, Bicknell said, based on the last interview. "We had two good candidates. We called him May 18. He said he wanted the job and that he'd start on August 4."

Ashley also told Bicknell that he might be able to come to Norwell sooner, but then called to say he could not get out of his summer teaching job.

But, Ashley said he had a free week in June and would visit the Science Center then to meet the staff. He later called - prior to that June week - and said he couldn't make it after all because he had to attend meetings that related to his winter teaching job at Plymouth State.

"It turns out," Bicknell said, "that the week he said he was in meetings was the week he was in New Mexico."

When Jon Bond called Ashley that week, a woman who answered the telephone said he was out of the country for a family emergency.

Bicknell said the search committee started looking for an assistant administrator last October. But, when former director, Faith Burbank, announced her decision to leave, the group suspended that original search and looked for someone in whom they could combine both positions.

The search for an executive director began early this year with ads placed in trade publications, Bicknell said. Meetings began at the end of February, and the search ended in May when the job was offered to Ashley.

The commission has not yet taken any action on finding a new tenant primarily because some of the members are away on vacation.

Hockey team buries winless past with record start

An "old" adage that attempts to describe the turnaround in Cohasset's hockey fortunes would not be sufficient in describing the "Christy's."

To say "the boys are playing great hockey with enthusiasm" falls short.

The Christy's are Cohasset's high school age hockey team in the Pilgrim Arena's summer youth hockey program. The team is comprised of 13 to 14 boys, ages 14 to 18 from Cohasset and has been sponsored by Republican State Senate candidate, Christy Mihos.

Mihos donated jerseys last spring with his business's insignia, Christy's Markets. But the team failed to win a game in the fiercely competitive Pilgrim Spring Hockey program.

In the spring, the Christy's lost to several teams comprised of many veteran Division 1 players off state championship teams. They were also without the services of several talented but injured players.

All that is now history for the Christy's, as they have zoomed away from the competition over the first three games of the season.

Two players may have been the difference in the "new" Christy's. Charles Smith has returned to the lineup after a shoulder separation during the high school hockey season and Cohasset newcomer, Mike Noble has been added to the team. Many stalwarts from the spring team returned with new enthusiasm and the boys have matured together after having played through such a difficult time.

On defense, Kevin Mulcahy, always tenacious on the ice, has added his own unique mischief to the character of the team. An imaginative shotblocker, Kevin has provided outstanding defense and leadership to the team this summer. Joining Kevin on defense are Tim Conroy, Mike Noble and Charles Smith.

Tim Conroy, a starter as an eighth grader on the Cohasset High Hockey team, has improved greatly through the spring and summer programs. Tim has a hard accurate low shot from the blue line, and he has been scoring from distances of 35 feet.

Mike Noble, a soon-to-be Cohasset high senior moved to town this spring. His presence on the team has been both stabilizing and productive. Mike's puck handling and his ability to carry the puck and to rush to the net on offense have created a multitude of scoring opportunities for his teammates.

Charles Smith, a versatile sophomore, adds size, skill and intelligence to the team. His willingness to play any position has given the team increased depth and flexibility.

On offense, the name is Mike Reynolds. Mike and his cousin Matt Krameris are skating demons. Together they have tallied five goals over three games and have assisted on several more.

Playing with confidence and zeal have been Brian Donovan and Scott Varisco. Both boys are extremely hard working on the ice and together they have combined for two goals.

Rounding into shape are John Kinchla and Charley Shields. John has been taking power skating classes throughout the spring and summer. He can make the 'smart pass and is improving as a skater. Charley, after a year's layoff, is beginning to show signs of real brilliance. His size and strength should be a real asset to the program. Both boys have been hard working in games and should contribute as the team continues into the high school schedule this winter.

A boy the high school team will miss this winter is Mike Riley. Mike, despite his size, fights for every puck and makes the smart pass. He will be transferring to Nobles and Greenough this fall.

The goalie corps has been outstanding. Jim Rosano, a senior, and Jeff Stone, a junior, have been sharing net duties. Both have been diligent in denying the opposition and they both have been enthusiastic, cooperative and positive as the members of the team most responsible for Christy's success. Their combined attitudes and demeanors have helped to create an unusual confidence which has in turn raised the level of team play.

Missing from the summer program are two outstanding players, Chuck Endris and John Murphy. It is expected that they will finish with their soccer obligations and return in shape for the winter hockey season.

Senior Mark Batts and underclassmen Anthony Wigmore, Jared Graves and Matt Graves are also expected to return to the high school team this winter.

Wey sails into first place of Flying Scot

Cohasset sailor George Wey has taken command in the Flying Scot Fleet 105 races.

Wey, who was the fleet champion the last two years, grabbed two more wins last Saturday and is on line for a third straight title.

"Before last week the race for the title was wide open," Fleet 105 member Ray Kasperowitz said. "But now George is in control. It's pretty much his title to lose. It like a baseball team with a six game lead with only a month left to play."

In last Saturday's first race, Wey grabbed first place with able assistance from his son Matthew.

Pete Chapman sailed to second place.

And Pete Goedecke finished up in third.

In the second race of the day, Wey took first again.

Goedecke cruised to second place.

And Rick Swamborg came in third.

The fleet has competitions every Saturday on Cohasset Harbor off Sandy Beach.

The races last until Labor Day when the sailor with the best finish average takes the championship trophy.

"The Function of Pain"

Pain is important to your well-being. It is nature's early warning signal. A message relayed through your nervous system that tells you when something is wrong. As such, pain is merely a symptom and not the cause of most health problems. Therefore, the sensible approach to health is not to merely turn off the pain (or treat the symptom). But rather to find the causes and correct them.

Nine-year-olds open season with winning record

By John Smoot
Special to the Mariner

Cohasset's 9-year-old entry in the Suburban Youth Baseball League opened the summer season with two wins in three games. The team, sponsored by the Mass 4 X 4 Association, beat Hingham and Randolph and lost to Braintree.

COHASSET 10 - HINGHAM 2

Cohasset's Greg Taylor struck out eight batters while pitching three shut out innings. Alex Schwerin came through with two solid innings of middle relief and Justin Golden closed the game for Cohasset by striking out the side in the last inning.

Eric "Vacuum Cleaner" Hanian squelched a Hingham rally in the fifth inning with a shoestring catch of a curving infield pop-up. Ben "The Cat" Smoot demonstrated his quickness and agility at catcher.

Cohasset had nine hits over the six inning game including four doubles in a six run third inning. Jeff Flanagan's double cleared the bases, chalking up three RBI's for The Batman. Jim O'Sullivan had a perfect night at bat with two hits and a walk in three trips to the plate. Alex Schwerin also contributed two hits and Jamie DeMichele broke the game open with a timely two-run double.

BRAINTREE 8 - COHASSET 4

Jim O'Sullivan, Ben Smoot, and Denis Rooney combined to throw a three-hitter against Braintree in this disappointing loss in Cohasset's second game. Alex Schwerin sparkled in the field by making two spectacular catches on blistering line drives to the "hot corner". Denis Rooney brought the Cohasset crowd to life when he entered the game and promptly struck out two batters with the bases loaded to end the fourth inning. Michael Rossi was rock solid behind the plate.

Braintree played a solid defensive game, holding Cohasset to six hits and allowing only four walks. Braintree's second baseman, David Trahan, was outstanding in the field and played a role in ten of Cohasset's eighteen outs. Jeff Flanagan drove in two of Cohasset's four runs with a solid double in the sixth inning.

COHASSET 21 - RANDOLPH 2

Cohasset's bats came to life against Randolph. Alex Schwerin, Jim O'Sullivan, and Kevin DeVito had two hits apiece. Schwerin doubled and tripled. O'Sullivan singled and tripled. His triple came with the bases loaded and he just missed an inside the park grand slam.

The home team's bats were hot, but the base on balls proved fatal to Randolph as twenty two Cohasset batters trotted freely to first base. Lead off batter Ben Roine walked five times in five times at bat. His on base percentage over the first three games is a whopping 909 percent.

Greg Taylor continued his scoreless inning streak by pitching three shutout innings. He struck out five and received solid support in the field. Steve Baker made a nice grab on a fly ball to left field to end the second inning. Justin Golden and Ben Smoot combined to cut down a Randolph runner at the plate in the third inning. Justin Golden closed the game for Cohasset by striking out seven over the last three innings. Jim O'Sullivan helped him out of a bases loaded jam by running down a fly ball to centerfield to end the fourth inning. Greg Taylor got the game's last out by making a nice play on ground ball to shortstop and quickly zipping the ball to Kevin DeVito at second base for the force play.

UPCOMING GAMES

Cohasset will play the league leading Braintree American team this Friday night at home. Braintree American is coached by WWF Wrestler Chris Duffy and is said to be the most disciplined baseball team in the tournament.

Sailing competition has no clear winner

The 210 Fleet sailing competitions, based at the Cohasset Yacht Club, are underway and after several weeks of sailing no clear favorite has emerged.

Last Saturday two races were held.

Tom Hamilton, the fleets defending champion, sailed to first place on his boat "Toucan" in the first race.

Don Clark and George Watts came in second aboard their boat "Breezin."

In the second race Sara Leggat cruised to a first place finish in her boat "ETTU."

And Hamilton came in second.

The Bim Simmons Memorial Bowl Race was held last Sunday as well and Hamilton grabbed first place.

The competitions run every Saturday in Mass Bay outside Sandy Beach in Cohasset until the end of August.

In addition to an award for the overall top finisher, awards will be given to the best finisher in the June and July series and the best finisher in the August series.

"The competition is wide open," Hamilton said. "I have had some good finishes but then so have many other people. With all the boats the same style, the skill and preparation of the captain and the crew are the deciding factors."

Their are fifteen International 210 boats in the 210 Fleet competitions this summer. The fleet has held competitions since '46.

Some of the sailors who have looked solid in the competitions this summer include:

Hamilton, Leggat, Clark and Watts, Fran Charles with his boat "Fanfare", Sam Wakeman with his boat "Wahconda", Jim Summers and Rick Schultz with their boat which has no name yet, Fred Baker with his boat "Plug Nickel", and Mike Bireman and Andrew Jeannero on their boat "Swifty".

"All those people are sailing well and it will be tough the rest of the way," said Hamilton.

Members of the fleet will be competing in the Volvo Regatta in Newport, Rhode Island this weekend. The regatta is for the New England Championships.

"Next to the National Championships held in August at Falmouth, this is the biggest race of the year," Hamilton said.

Teams slug through season openers

By John Kinchla
Special to the Mariner

The 9-year-old Suburban Youth Little Leaguers have demonstrated that the competition is not too much for them. Under the capable direction of Coach John Smoot and Dr. Steve Golden, the 9's rocked Hingham 10-2 in their first game of the tournament. The 9's will play 10 games and possibly more if they make the playoffs and all indications are that this team may be able to go all the way.

Greg Taylor, Ben Smoot, Mike Rossi and Justin Golden are the veteran major leaguers that made this team after tryouts were held to determine the roster. Added to these vets were minor leaguers Alex Schwerin, Dennis Rooney, Ben Roine, Jim O'Sullivan, Steve Kovack, Eric Hanian, Kevin DeVito, Jamie DeMichelle, and Steve Baker.

FOR AN IDEA OF HOW DIRTY YOUR ORIENTAL RUG IS, RUB THIS AND LOOK AT YOUR FINGER.
Oriental rugs are constantly picking up various types of soil. Some are greasy and some are gritty. But they all can eat away at your treasured possession.
For your Oriental rug to retain its beauty and value, it should be cleaned at least once every three to five years.
At Grillo Oriental Rug Cleaning, we carefully examine each rug, then give it the most suitable treatment. Sometimes that means gentle machine-washing, other times it means our 'Art-Safe' hand-washing. And our exclusive equipment and methodology enable us to remove the deep-set grit that others miss.
Furthermore, unlike harsh commercial cleaning, our individualized, museum-quality care is always safe, always effective.

Hingham this week in Suburban Youth Baseball Tournament play. The 10's played well in both contests.

Against Holbrook, the 10's lost 10 to 6. In this contest Scott VanHartsvelt pitched well. He tired in the fourth inning and Holbrook took advantage. Despite the loss, Cohasset played well. Paul Michael Quinton, Mark St. John and Pat Hurley all had hits. Brian Walsh had a hit and an RBI. Matt Lewis had two hits and made three excellent plays on defense. Ben Ketchum and Matt Verocchi both made outstanding catches.

Against Hingham, the 10's were led by Matt Lewis on the mound. Matt had 12 strikeouts, but the defense could not support his fine effort and the team lost 8 to 4.

The following players are expected to rally and play well in the second week of the tournament: Greg Bilton, Patrick Leahy, Tom Leahy, Colton Ralston, Robert Buckley, and Nate Cotter.

The team is being coached by veteran major league managers Kevin Lewis and King "Buddy" Bilton and assisted by Bill Ketchum and Stan Walsh.

11-YEAR-OLD TEAM

The 11's recorded their first win of the season with a win over Abington 10 to 1. Joe Magner took the mound in the opener and baffled Abington with his fast ball and changeup.

Joe was well supported by Justin Buckley, Taylor Devin and Sean Norris. This trio playing shortstop, second base and first base recorded a double play on Abington in the first inning. The play may have intimidated the competition as Cohasset rolled through six innings of solid baseball from that point on.

Playing outstanding ball for Coaches Dave Buckley, Jim Magner and Kevin O'Connor were the following boys: Frank Abadie, Robert Buckley, Eli Kahn, Doug Cameron, Matt O'Connor, Sean Cogill, Andy Hamilton, Matt Belson, Burke Davis, and Kevin Duffy.

Once again, leftfielder Matt O'Connor sparkled in left field and on the base paths.

12-YEAR-OLD TEAM

The 12's continued to roll the competition over in the first week of the Suburban Youth Baseball Tournament. The 12's beat both Hingham and Randolph.

Playing excellent ball for Cohasset against Hingham were Jonah Berger, who recorded 13 strikeouts. Hitting stars were Greg Stevens and Grant Emde. Eric Henry caught an excellent game.

Against Randolph, Cohasset's Kenny Leahy continued with his outstanding fielding as did Brian Riley. Greg Stevens had three hits and three RBI's. Jonah Berger walloped a two run homer. The following boys also played great ball: Nevin Bunstein at catcher, Matt Rossi at third base, Jamie Kondrat, Simeon Ketchum, Matt Conley, and Kevin McKenna.

The team is coached by Jay Caron, Dave Leahy and Brian Rossi.

Local gymnasts enter Bay State games

Noelle Roma and Tara Gallagher with the Cohasset Community entered the Bay State Game Trials for Gymnastics on Saturday June 23. The Bay State Games were held at the Spectrum Gymnastics in Brockton.

Roma has been working out at the Cohasset Community Center for several months now. One of her main goals was to get ready for the Cohasset High School gymnastics team in November. Roma entered the Bay State Games to see how well she would perform in competition. (She had not competed for a year and a half and performed quite well for just returning to the sport.) Roma is presently working out at the Ellis School along with the Cohasset Center.

Gallagher, also a member of the Cohasset Community Center has been part of the Cohasset High School gymnastics team for three years now. Along with practice at the center, Tara is also getting in shape at the Ellis School. Gallagher performed extremely well in the trials and will be going onto the finals on July 21 in Boston. High school teammate also with the Cohasset Center, captain Carrie Ripley will be competing in the Womens Division on July 21.

Coach Ruthann Sargent of the Cohasset Community Center and Cohasset High School will be responsible at the finals for Gallagher and Ripley.

Tara Hettstrom of the Cohasset Community Center placed first at the Cape Cod Gymnastics finals held recently in Dennis. Tara works out at the Community Center under the direction of coaching director Ruthann Sargent. Tara was in the 8-9 year old Division. Sargent said that in the future Tara will be a promising high school gymnastics competitor.

Road Race, Aug. 5

South Shore runners should starting getting in shape for the annual Road House Classic race Sunday Aug. 5 at 10 a. m. in Marshfield.

The course is 7.5 miles long, which is longer than most road races, according to Charles Fletcher, race director.

He said the longer course is a great way for runners to build up their endurance and estimates that an "average" runner can complete the classic in about one hour.

The Marshfield race is also good preparation for the Falmouth Race held several weeks later.

"Everybody's welcome," to join the Road House Classic, Fletcher said. In the past, "we've had some real good runners."

Bob Hodge won last year's race. Hodge finished the Boston Marathon in second place several years ago.

Fletcher said he expects about 150 - 200 runners to participate.

The fee is $7 in advance and $8 the day of the race. The first 150 entrants will receive t-shirts courtesy of George Andrews, owner of The Road House.

In addition, awards will be given for the following categories: first male and female junior, under 18 years old; first three male and female, open, 18-39; first three male and female, masters, 40-49; first three male and female seniors, 50-59; and the first male and female, grand seniors, over 60.

To receive an application, call 837-3107 and leave your name and address on the machine. An application will be mailed to you.

Performing arts workshop

A two week workshop for young performers will be offered at the South Shore Conservatory Aug. 6-18.

The workshop is designed to expose young performers to all the skills needed for successful participation in musical theater as it exists in the school and community.

Ellen Kelly and Ed Sorrentino, will serve as the program directors of the workshop which is geared towards pre-teen to adult students.

This summer day camp is a new program at the Conservatory and will touch on all skills needed for performance in the musical theater, said Kelly.

Workshop classes will include singing, movement/dance, acting/writing, and music/playing for musicals/conducting. Much of the work will be on an individual or small group basis, Kelly said.

Professional coaches for the program include Mary Reilly, voice; Sharon Weber, dance; Christine Wilson, accompanist; special guest Neils Miller, tap; and others. "It's an exciting faculty," Kelly said.

Kelly will interview all those interested to learn the student's area of interest, experience and skill level to form a student profile. This interview process is not to exclude anyone, but to better "tailor" the workshop to suit the needs of the student, she said.

Extensive experience in the theater is not necessary, Kelly said. Most students need only have a desire to participate in the intensive program. The workshops will strive to help students overcome performance fears and to work on problem areas.

Kelly said she hopes the instructors can answer student's questions concerning the theater.

The program will be somewhat modeled after a typical summer stock experience. She said that students will learn "theater discipline", while still having fun.

The program will culminate in a public cabaret style performance for the student's family and friends.

An ideal number of students would be approximately 20 to 25, she said. As this is the first year of the program, the directors, as well as the students will be learning.

Kelly, chairman of special programs and head of the drama department, designed and started the Conservatory's first creative dramatics program for children in 1978.

Historical Society hosts walking tour

By David H. Wadsworth
Special to the Mariner

The Cohasset Historical Society will hold a historical walking tour of the town's famed Common and the center village on Sunday, July 29. The tour will meet on the Common near the colonial meetinghouse at 2 p.m. Admission is free.

Cohasset's Town Common is an original New England Common, having its origin in the undivided common land of the town of Hingham in the early 1600s. (Cohasset was the east part of Hingham until 1770.)

Society's walking tour will visit Cohasset's historic center village, itself a location of early residences and early businesses. Here the mid-1700s inn on the stage route can be seen, as can numerous dwellings dating from the 18th and 19th centuries.

Today several of these early homes contain both businesses and residences. Many of the earliest homes in the center village are still standing, some relatively unchanged since they were constructed by the town's early residents.

The tour will end at the Historical Society's Capt. John Wilson House and Maritime Museum at Elm Street. Here, museum exhibits relate to the early years of the town. Artifacts, documents, pictures, maps and charts depict the history of this New England seacoast village. The Historical Society's Common and Village walking tour offers a glimpse into an age now past in Cohasset.

Road Race, Aug. 5

South Shore runners should starting getting in shape for the annual Road House Classic race Sunday Aug. 5 at 10 a. m. in Marshfield.

The course is 7.5 miles long, which is longer than most road races, according to Charles Fletcher, race director.

He said the longer course is a great way for runners to build up their endurance and estimates that an "average" runner can complete the classic in about one hour.

The Marshfield race is also good preparation for the Falmouth Race held several weeks later.

"Everybody's welcome," to join the Road House Classic, Fletcher said. In the past, "we've had some real good runners."

Bob Hodge won last year's race. Hodge finished the Boston Marathon in second place several years ago.

Fletcher said he expects about 150 - 200 runners to participate.

The fee is $7 in advance and $8 the day of the race. The first 150 entrants will receive t-shirts courtesy of George Andrews, owner of The Road House.

In addition, awards will be given for the following categories: first male and female junior, under 18 years old; first three male and female, open, 18-39; first three male and female, masters, 40-49; first three male and female seniors, 50-59; and the first male and female, grand seniors, over 60.

To receive an application, call 837-3107 and leave your name and address on the machine. An application will be mailed to you.

Performing arts workshop

A two week workshop for young performers will be offered at the South Shore Conservatory Aug. 6-18.

The workshop is designed to expose young performers to all the skills needed for successful participation in musical theater as it exists in the school and community.

Ellen Kelly and Ed Sorrentino, will serve as the program directors of the workshop which is geared towards pre-teen to adult students.

This summer day camp is a new program at the Conservatory and will touch on all skills needed for performance in the musical theater, said Kelly.

Workshop classes will include singing, movement/dance, acting/writing, and music/playing for musicals/conducting. Much of the work will be on an individual or small group basis, Kelly said.

Professional coaches for the program include Mary Reilly, voice; Sharon Weber, dance; Christine Wilson, accompanist; special guest Neils Miller, tap; and others. "It's an exciting faculty," Kelly said.

Kelly will interview all those interested to learn the student's area of interest, experience and skill level to form a student profile. This interview process is not to exclude anyone, but to better "tailor" the workshop to suit the needs of the student, she said.

Extensive experience in the theater is not necessary, Kelly said. Most students need only have a desire to participate in the intensive program. The workshops will strive to help students overcome performance fears and to work on problem areas.

Kelly said she hopes the instructors can answer student's questions concerning the theater.

The program will be somewhat modeled after a typical summer stock experience. She said that students will learn "theater discipline", while still having fun.

The program will culminate in a public cabaret style performance for the student's family and friends.

An ideal number of students would be approximately 20 to 25, she said. As this is the first year of the program, the directors, as well as the students will be learning.

Kelly, chairman of special programs and head of the drama department, designed and started the Conservatory's first creative dramatics program for children in 1978.

AIDS coalition and KKK clash at Houston summit didn't matter, though. They got their point across.

I found myself caught in the crossfire of the exchanges of hatred between the KKK and AIDS Coalition to Unleash Power (ACTUP). And what an evil place to be caught.

To my right, ACTUP screamed that "even the Klan has AIDS", while the KKK and skinheads retaliated shouting, "white power."

My first experience with the KKK came, ironically, at a time when First Amendment rights are being tested across the country. The government has tried to limit of free expression over the burning of the flag, and certain Americans are trying to limit free speech by banning "obscene" rap music.

The experience, although uncomfortable and frightening, reaffirmed my beliefs that the right to free expression cannot be curtailed by the government.

However, Eric Jozesf, a student from the University of Paris, said that in his country such demonstrations are forbidden. "In France," he wrote, "racism is not an opinion. It is a crime."

So began my introduction to Houston, Texas, where I spent a week attending the 1990 Economic Summit of Industrialized Nations.

The week included many firsts for me, my first experience covering an international event, my first trip to Houston, my first rodeo and my first, and hopefully last, experience with the Ku Klux Klan.

The Rice Thresher, Rice University's student newspaper, invited 10 student journalists from colleges and universities in America and six students from the foreign countries that were represented at the summit, to come to Houston.

The visiting students, along with 17 members of the Thresher staff produced three issues of the newspaper during the summit.

We arrived in Houston on Thursday, July 5, four days before the summit's opening ceremonies. We toured around the beautiful Rice campus and learned about the rich tradition that characterizes this low-profile institution.

The campus, however, was rapidly transformed by the Secret Service to insure the safety of some of the world's most prominent leaders. Rice soon resembled Fort Knox and we were practically put under house arrest.

Police officers, standing twenty feet apart, encircled the campus, and no one could get on the campus unless they had a special pass. In addition, everyone had to have their bags inspected and go through a metal detector prior to gaining admission to the campus.

The week had much in store for the thousands of visiting journalists and dignitaries that had flocked to Houston for the summit.

On Friday, a group of us attended the broccoli summit. This summit was not designed to solve any of the world's economic problems, it did however, poke fun at President George Bush's problem with broccoli.

Three of the area's most prominent chefs were on hand to show off their best broccoli recipes. Eighty thousand pounds of the vegetable--donated through the Houston Fresh Fruit & Vegetable Association piled in a pyramid and later distributed to approximately 45 local charities.

Later in the day, some of us attended a few sessions at The Other Economic Summit (TOES). TOES is an annual dialogue between special interests groups, academicians and Third World politicians.

With all of the journalists in town, several groups decided to take advantage of the exposure and hold rallies.

After months of being coached about the economic benefits of hosting an international event, the citizens of Houston extended a warm welcome to the media.

Saturday night the media was treated to MediaFest. The city of Houston sponsored this progressive dinner which took place at four city museums. The lavish spread included Texas delicacies, open bars and live entertainment.

Sunday night, the journalists were once again treated to a Texas-style festivity. We attended a barbecue and a rodeo at the Astrodome. Other guests included George and Barbara Bush, British Prime Minister Margaret and Dennis Thatcher, Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and his wife, Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu of Japan and his wife and Jacques Delors, president of the European Community.

We were even entertained by the Grand Ole Opry, including performances by Loretta Lynn and Minnie Pearl. After the show, President Bush and his wife came on stage to thank all of the rodeo entertainers.

Although the entertainment and the two press bags filled with Houston goodies impressed the journalists, not all of the students felt satisfied.

Some wondered why Houston had to fill the media headquarters with a 24-hour dining service complete with an seven-line buffet and open bar.

"Perhaps they believe a well-fed and inebriated press corps will look more kindly on a President that seems to have lost control of his lips, on a city that has seen some rough times of late and on a university that up until now has completely avoided the spotlight," wrote Robert Miller, a student from the University of Miami.

Many of us wondered if all the money spent impressing the journalists could have been better spent on Houston's underprivileged.

"Any city that can raise enough money to give more than 3,000 journalists a 15x24 inch hand towel...and provide seven tables of expensive delicacies served 24-hours a day, ought to be able to take care of its own citizens," wrote Noelle Vance, a University of Michigan student.

Once the summit officially started, many of us had the opportunity to attend press conferences with Chief of Staff John Sununu, Secretary of State James Baker, and Secretary of the Treasury Nicholas Brady. Some of the students even waited in line attend the final press conference given by President Bush.

We had full press credentials and rubbed elbows with the most prominent members of the press corps. However, not one of the student journalists had the courage to ask a question following someone like Brit Hume.

One lucky student, Jonathan Marshall, of Oxford University, shook President Bush's hand as he and his wife took an impromptu stroll around the media center.

Although many people predicted that nothing important would come out of the economic summit, most of the student journalists believe that the summit was a worthwhile endeavor.

The agreement to study the Soviet economy was a viable compromise to the issue of joint Soviet aid. Progress appears to have been made on the General Agreement of Trade and Tariffs (GATT). Finally, there seems to be a future for President Bush's "Enterprise for Latin America."

Regardless of what was accomplished by the leaders of the G-7, the students who were allowed to participate in the summit gained experience that cannot be summed up in a final communique.

We have learned about the summit procedures, about how the press corps operates, and we learned much from our interaction with one another.

The foreign students gave me a better perspective on the culture and policies of their respective countries. For example, when I asked Boris Maurer, a student from Bonn, West Germany, where he was when the Berlin Wall opened, I received an answer that made me truly understand the significance of the event.

He looked me in the eye and told me that he watched the event on television and just cried. His words and his further explanation of the meaning of German reunification made me understand how recent events in Germany were really affecting the people.

My week in Houston allowed me a glimpse into world politics and media, and perhaps most importantly, into the culture and lives of college students across the nation and the world.

Woman arrested for Cohasset break-ins

By Mary Calandrella
Mariner staff

Police have charged a Scituate woman with two of seven recent breaking and enterings in the Furnace and Forest Street area of Marshfield.

Working with police departments from Duxbury, Pembroke, Scituate and Norwell, Marshfield police have charged Melanie S. Mastropietro, 37, of 18 Buttonwood Road in Scituate with two local break-ins.

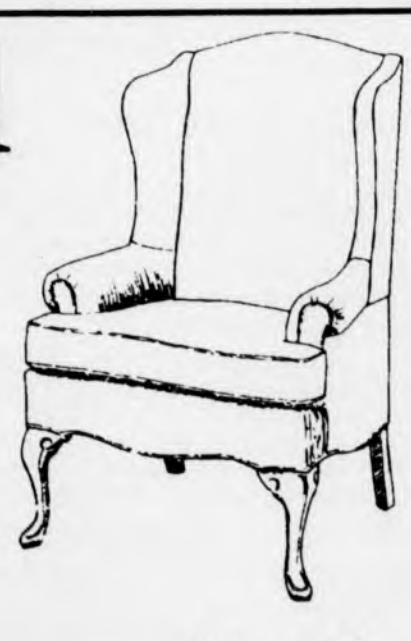
"Our detectives have done a bang-up job," Marshfield Police Captain James Lopes said Tuesday.

According to Norwell Detective Sergeant Donald Bongarzone, Scituate police have charged Mastropietro with two housebreaks and illegal possession of narcotics and Cohasset has charged her with four break-ins. Norwell is investigating several breaks from May to the middle of June, but police have not yet filed charges against Mastropietro.

Area police had put Mastropietro under surveillance and followed her to woods in Cohasset where they recovered silver place settings, compact disk players and a large amount of jewelry and war medals, which were stolen from a Cohasset house, Bongarzone said.

With a warrant from Hingham District Court, Scituate police arrested Mastropietro on Route 3A. She pleaded innocent at her arraignment Monday.

Bongarzone said Mastropietro also operates under an alias as Melanie McComber.



Police believe that Mastropietro would go to a home and, if someone answered, ask for directions.

Scituate woman arrested for Cohasset break-ins...

If no one was home, she would seek access, Lopes said.

Although she has been charged with two Marshfield break-ins only, Marshfield police believe Mastropietro is responsible for other Marshfield break-ins, Lopes said. "We also believe someone else was involved," he added.

During the past two weeks, seven break-ins have been reported, Lopes said.

Last week Marshfield police responded to break-ins at Highland Street on July 10, Forest Street on July 11 and Careswell Street, Pine Street and Webster Street on July 12. The previous week, there were break-ins on Furnace Street and Forest Street.

All took place in daylight hours.

Generally, the intruders force open a window to gain entry, Lopes said. Once inside, they look for TVs, VCRs, cash and other items that are easily disposed of,.

"They want things that are easily carried and easily marketable," he said.

Residents who note an unfamiliar car or suspicious behavior should call the police, Lopes said.

Marshfield police do not believe that the July 9 break-ins at the town pier and Canal Street are related to those in the Furnace and Forest Street area, he said.

Until this recent series, the number of break-ins had decreased tremendously, Lopes said.

'Gentle' Whittaker performs at the Music Circus

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

Roger Whittaker is a hard man to label.

Sure, everyone's heard his love ballads on those late night TV commercials.

But last Saturday night, the gentle Whittaker brought his own style to the revolving stage of the South Shore Music Circus.

Whittaker, wearing a ruffled white shirt and blue jeans, began the show with the kind of country and pop tunes that people have come to expect from him.

His voice is strong, displaying depth and emotion. When he whistles, everyone pays attention.

Whittaker wove folk songs of his native Kenya throughout the performance.

His backup band — two guitars, a synthesizer, piano and drums — were dressed simply in black slacks and white shirts.

The two backup singers added an interesting array of instruments to various numbers. Their instruments — like their outfits — were eclectic. One woman, Laurel, wore a flamboyant and short purple dress that accented her slim figure. The other woman, Kirsten, wore a low-cut floral dress that fell just above her ankles. They sang along, adding a higher range of melody, and tapped and shook various African instruments that fit with the arrangements.

Roger Whittaker

Laurel, who hails from Nashville, also played a mean electric violin.

Whittaker is clearly a man who is comfortable within himself. The audience might not have been terribly thrilled with his decision to teach them how to whistle like an African but they loved his sound.

Lovely folk songs were scattered through the performance, reaching into many heritages besides his own African background. There were songs of long ago from Ireland, Scotland, etc.

For the second half of the evening, Whittaker dressed up a bit. His band followed suit — the men in solid black shirts and slacks. Kirsten wore a low-cut gown in black and white, heavily accented with ruffles. Laurel wore a simple black beaded dress that caught the lights like glitter.

The performance remained solid.

For lovers of love songs, this was worth the price of admission.

His rendition of "Bring in the Clowns" was dramatic. His "Cabaret" was clear and true. His "New World in the Morning" was soulful.

And for his encore, the man proved he could rock out with the best of them.

Whittaker and his backup band perform again tonight (Thursday) at the Music Circus.

Music Circus to host Nelson, Newhart and Kinison

The 40th anniversary summer season at South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset continues with appearances by country singer Willie Nelson, July 26 and 27; comedian Bob Newhart, July 28; and comedian Sam Kinison, July 29.

Willie Nelson, whose work ranges from international pop to honky tonk country, will appear at the Music Circus for two performances only, Thursday and Friday, July 26 and 27. Show time each evening is 8 p.m.

Despite recording the widest range of material of any artist in the business, Willie Nelson maintains that there is a common element to all of his music. "I haven't changed," he says. "I'm doing basically the same thing musically I've been doing all along. Our music is good music, and the people who hear it, like it, and want to become a part of it."

Comedian Bob Newhart, appearing at the Music Circus at 8 p.m. on Friday, July 28, is today best known for his three highly successful television series, the third of which, "Newhart," recently concluded its acclaimed run on CBS in May.

However, Newhart got his start in the entertainment world as a stand-up comic. His first album, "The Button-Down Mind of Bob Newhart," sold more than 750,000 copies in the United States alone and became the first comedy album to reach the Number One slot on the record charts. His classic monologues, including "The Driving Instructor," made him the hottest ticket at every top nightclub in the country.

Newhart's special guest star for his Cohasset appearance will be Broadway and cabaret singer Donna Theodore.

Comedian Sam Kinison, appearing at the Music Circus on Sunday, July 29, at 7:30 p.m., has recently released his third comedy album, "Leader of the Banned," and the man dubbed "the most controversial comic in America" is making sure that his album lives up to its name.

Kinison says, "There have been a few other comedians who have jumped on my bandwagon. I don't want to mention any names, but some folks have seen what's worked for me, and grafted it onto their own acts hoping to get a piece of my audience."

Kinison has been a familiar face on the cable networks in addition to making appearances on such network shows as "Saturday Night Live" and "Married With Children."

For information, or to charge tickets by telephone, patrons may call the Music Circus box office at 383-1400.

Local merchant thinks RR will kill business

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

Brian Noble, president of the Hingham Merchants' Association, equates the coming of the Greenbush railroad line with the death of Hingham Square.

"It just doesn't make sense," Noble said, standing behind his family's camera shop in the Square, on the edge of the railroad right-of-way.

The Hingham Merchants' Association is in the camp that opposes restoration of the Old Colony line through Hingham Square.

The merchants group includes about 100 members. Noble says there will be a loss of 400 jobs in the Square if the railroad goes through.

There are about 400 people who work in the Square, according to Noble.

"They won't end up out of work. They are bright people. Business will just move," Noble said.

Indeed Noble's Camera Shop has already started hedging its bets for the future. There are Noble's shops in Lincoln Plaza and on Route 3A in Cohasset as well as the original shop in the Square.

"I'm fighting for my livelihood," Noble said. "People won't stop here to drop off their film if they have to park in a parking garage a block away.

"They (the MBTA officials) tell us that the railroad hasn't hurt business in Manchester. But they never shut the railroad down in Manchester.

"In other communitites you don't see business right along the tracks. Usually business is two blocks away from the tracks.

"The businesses in Hingham grew up here after the railroad stopped operating.

"There's nowhere that's anything like Hingham," Noble said.

He pointed out that Stephen Polechronis, MBTA project manager for the Old Colony restoration project, talks about the fact that most of the projected ridership will live within five miles of the line.

Running the line along the coast, given the five-mile commuting distance for the ridership, makes no sense, Noble said. He pointed out that if the line were moved five miles inland from the coast, then it would run through South Hingham along Route 3.

Noble thinks a monorail along Route 3 would be a far better idea than diesel-powered trains through Hingham Square.

The MBTA study rules out the monorail alternative or the inland route. Little detail in the study explains why the alternative was rejected.

There is an explanation on the choice of diesel engines. The rationale is that these are the same type trains used on the commuter rail lines to the north and west of Boston. The MBTA wants the trains on its commuter lines to be interchangeable.

Noble says that the railroad's backers often quote the ballot referendum on the rail issue and claim that Hingham is in favor of the plan.

"But being in favor of rail doesn't mean being in favor of this particular plan and all its ramifications," he said.

"Most people don't realize there are 43 grade crossings along the 19 miles of track," he said.

Fire Chief given written reprimand

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

Selectmen unanimously voted to place an official letter of reprimand in Fire Chief Daniel Brock's employee file for his failure to process ambulance billings in a timely manner. Selectmen learned recently that the fire department had not processed claims dating back to November 1989.

Brock defended his performance at the selectmen's meeting of July 23. According to Brock, the fire department's secretary had been solely responsible for billing the claims. Although she was laid off in June 1989 as part of the cost-saving moves, she came back a couple of times a month to take care of the billings. The part-time arrangement lasted until November

Brock claimed that when the town reached a settlement with the union he thought it was understood by all the parties that the department would put things on hold until the department had received training in insurance billing and computer equipment. The computer purchase had to be authorized at a special town meeting.

"I thought the board understood we were doing nothing," Brock said. "Apparently the board had a different view."

Brock said a couple of his firefighters volunteered to help him catch up on the ambulance

Chart House faces parking woes

When the Chart House Restaurant opens in the space formerly occupied by Hugo's Lighthouse, the only thing that will be the same is the lack of parking. Selectmen tabled the Chart House's request to use the parking lot on Government Island for limited valet parking to cope with parking overflow. No action will be taken on the request until after Labor Day.

The Chart House approached the town for permission to use the lot between the hours of 5 p.m. and 10 p.m. from two to five days per week only when their lot filled up. They thought they could overcome neighborhood concerns about noise, lights and security, but they hadn't reckoned on the residents of Parker Avenue.

Restaurant manager John Hankinson said they wanted to act now "rather than wait until we are knee-deep in cars parking every which way on Border Street. Once outside our lot, we have no control."

He said the restaurant would screen the parking lot each evening with a bamboo screen or nylon netting to diffuse glare from headlights, all parking would be done by valets and a security guard would be posted at the lot for the entire period of time it was in use.

Hankinson did not anticipate heavy use of the Government Island lot. Chart House, he explained, is a restaurant for fine dining and did not cater to Hugo's nightclub/lounge clientele who tend to come early and stay late.

Although Town Counsel Richard Henderson said there was nothing prohibiting the board from renting or leasing the lot to the Chart House, residents continued to question the legality of such an action. They cited opinions by former town counsels as evidence.

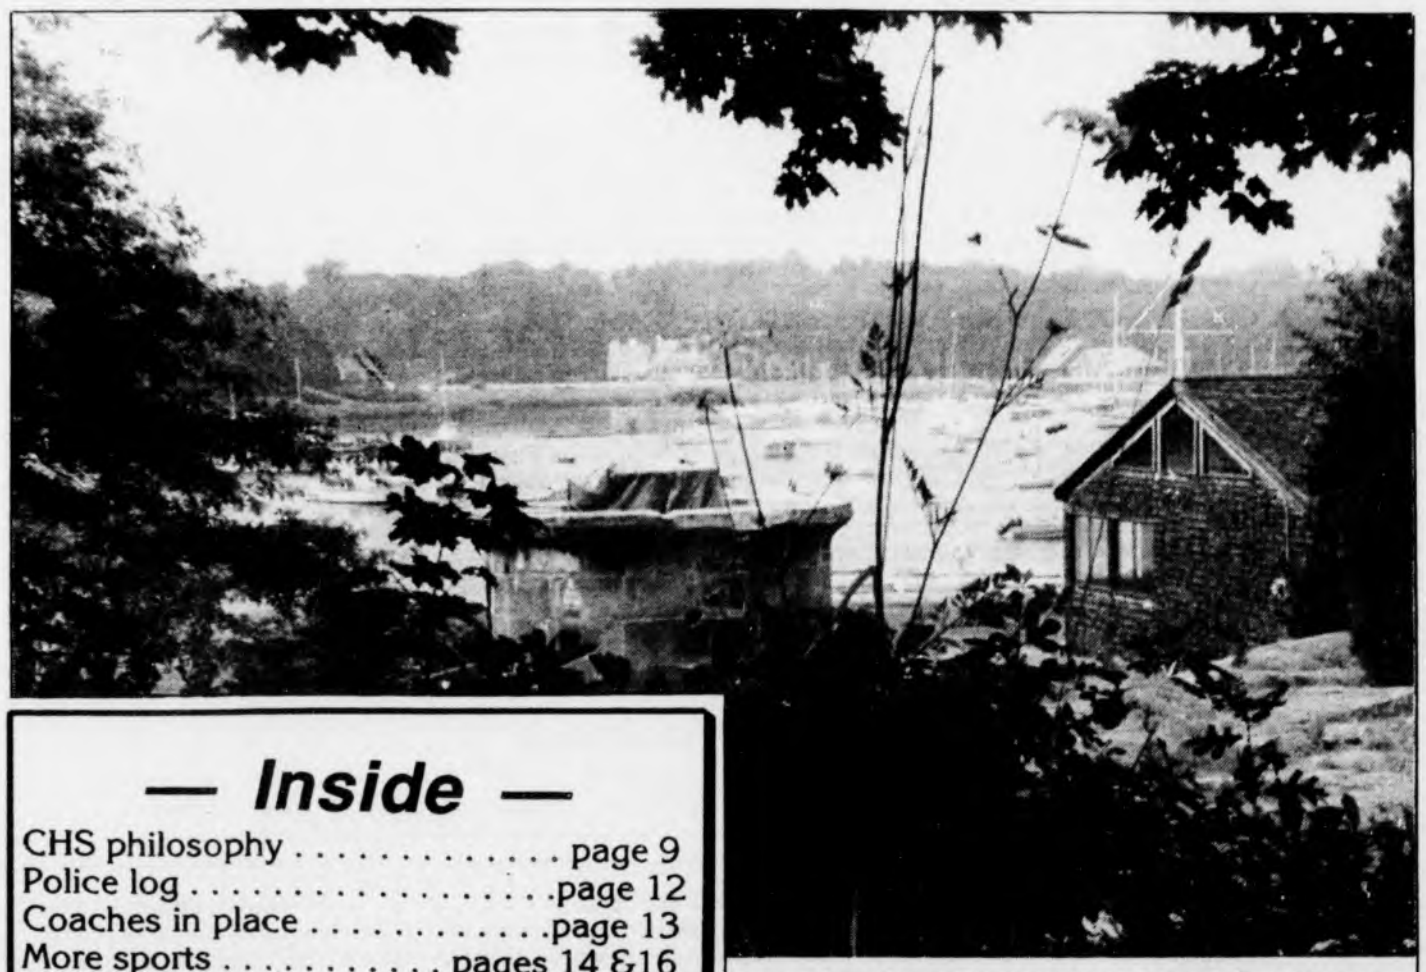
"We're also concerned about exhaust emissions," Anne Clarke, 26 Parker Ave., said. "The edge of my property is less than 50 feet from the parking lot."

Ann Fogarty of 20 Parker Ave. agreed.

"You must understand that the geography of the parking lot is level with our houses," she said. She questioned whether any action taken by Chart House could minimize the disruption of their quiet enjoyment of their own backyards."

Russell Bonetti, also of 20 Parker Ave., was the angriest of the neighbors.

He objected to the manner in which the neighbors were notified of the request to use Government Island, questioned the ability of Chart House to park as many cars in either lot as they claimed and accused Chart House of having fewer than the required number of handicapped parking spaces.



Bonetti claimed the town had promised to notify

Gene Peterson links up with proper golfing stance

Gene Peterson has a job that many people would envy.

Peterson is the golf pro at the Cohasset Golf Club and spends his days out on the links.

"I've been playing golf for about 30 years," Peterson said. "My father played and he's the one who got me interested. I played all sports, but I really enjoyed golf."

Peterson, who has a four handicap has been the club pro for 18 years.

Asked if he enjoys his job, Peterson laughs, "That's a stupid question to ask. I'm one of the few people who enjoys what they do."

A typical day for Peterson runs from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. His basic duties are to make sure that the club is running smoothly. This includes making sure the carts are in proper shape, supervising the driving range, organizing the caddying crew and running the pro shop.

"With all I have to do I don't get a chance to play as much as I'd like," he said. He estimates he plays about a round of golf per day.

He also gives lessons to those interested in the game.

"I probably give about four lessons a day," he said. "The most common mistake that beginning golfers make is that they do not take any lessons when they start. Lessons at the beginning will prevent developing any bad habits. They get you out on the right foot."

Peterson, 46, works at the club from May to

Goedecke gives town gift

Jane Goedecke found the perfect way to spend down her campaign war chest.

"Now that I'm spending so much time here, I see that the most popular route for coming into town hall isn't covered by a brick walkway," Goedecke said.

Although the brick walkway extends from the front door to the driveway in front of town hall, it's clear that town hall visitors are taking a shortcut from the parking lot — a wearing a path into the carefully tended lawn.

Goedecke proposed using some of her campaign funds to pay for an extension of the walkway leading from the parking lot to the existing walkway.

She said she had been meeting with Tree and Park Superintendent Peter Laugelle on her plans. Laugelle estimated the cost at approximately $800.

The board unanimously accepted Goedecke's gift of a brick walkway. She added that she may contribute additional funds in the fall for landscaping if necessary.

Laugelle used the occasion to remind townspeople that given the economic situation of the town, the tree and park department is always happy to accept donations. He said he has received five offers of trees to be planted on public land.

Cable Committee changes

Selectmen voted to change the composition of the cable television council. Under the new structure, the committee is reduced from nine to five members. The selectmen also freed the council from requirements that members be drawn from particular constituencies.

In requesting the changes Chairman John Packard said "We haven't been able to enlist enough souls to come forward. We can't make a quorum."

Packard said the committee has five active members at the present time.

"We can always expand the membership down the line when the work becomes more complex again," he said.

Packard hopes the revised council will be able to generate some enthusiasm for several projects he hopes to tackle in the coming months.

He outlined two major goals. The first is a survey of customer satisfaction and the second is an annual review of the contract.

Packard would like the council to prepare now for the contract renegotiation due in six years.

Town schedules full audit

Cohasset must undergo a full financial audit covering fiscal year 1989 unless they can get a waiver from the federal government. The audit is necessary because the town received more than $100,000 in federal funds during that fiscal year.

Under town by-laws, a full audit is necessary only every two years. The audit for 1989 came as a surprise.

Town Accountant Mary Gallagher discovered the overage when examining the books.

According to Executive Secretary Greg Doyon, the department misrecorded some revenue. Money the town assumed had been received in June was actually received in July, Doyon said.

He said the audit will cost the town an additional $7,800.

Selectman Martha Gjesteby suggested the town might qualify for a waiver. Selectmen approved the additional funds contingent upon the results of the request for a waiver.

Contracts on file at library

Residents who are bored with the best sellers now can peruse the town's union contracts. Selectmen approved a request by the government structure committee to place copies of ratified labor contracts on file at the library.

Selectmen weren't sure why the committee requested the action, but complied.

"It's public information," Selectman Martha Gjesteby reasoned.

Health plan bids sought

The health insurance committee issued a new request for proposals when the last one failed to turn up a viable plan.

The request has an open-ended deadline to encourage submissions.

"We're looking for a long term solution," Executive Secretary Greg Doyon said.

Doyon hopes Blue Cross-Blue Shield will grant a second extension on coverage. The health insurance company is terminating coverage of town employees because not enough employees enrolled to make it profitable for the company.

Drains Run Slow?

You'll never have a slow running, or clogged drain again! The secret? Clean drains don't run slow.

Slow drains, or periodic clogs, are SIGNALS that a thick layer of GOOK is choking your pipes. Grease, hair, and other waste stick to your pipes, with every use. This gook deposits along the entire length of the pipe. It chokes your pipes gradually, as it gets thicker and thicker.

Conventional drain openers can't fix slow drains. They react chemically on the surface of the gook. To be effective, they must remain in contact with the waste. Even a small tunnel through the gook lets them flow out to the sewer, leaving the gook behind.

gook
Ordinary drain products run here. →

In the past, the only way to remove this build-up was to rooter your pipes. An expensive, temporary measure.

Now, with just a few minutes each month, you can easily clean out your pipes... and KEEP them clean with Plumb Clean. Its totally unique formula clings, and penetrates deep into the gook. That is what allows it to liquefy even years of build-up. Plumb Clean will clean the entire length of your pipes. It will make your drains run like new, when used as directed. This penetrating action is so revolutionary, we stand behind Plumb Clean with a money-back guarantee!

Saves Money. A 1 lb. container of Plumb Clean holds up to 41 drain treatments. Even if drain openers could fix slow drains, it would take over 10 quart bottles to get the same number of treatments. Plumb Clean costs about 35¢ per treatment. We don't know of anything that cleans drains for less.

Safe Too. Conventional drain openers are dangerous chemicals. They can injure eyes on contact. They can release deadly vapors, in some situations. Some may damage your fixtures. Plumb Clean will not burn skin, or eyes. It will not release harmful fumes. When used as directed, it is 100% safe for people, and of course, all plumbing.

So, if your drains are giving you a SIGNAL, act now. Get safe, guaranteed Plumb Clean today!

Cohasset's week

New school meeting night

Beginning in September the school committee will try a new meeting night with the hope of attracting more press coverage.

The school committee has been meeting on Monday nights. The switch may give The Patriot Ledger a chance to send its town reporter to the meeting.

Chris Ford, school committee member, said there have been times when there was no reporter at school committee.

He said the school committee needs to develop the level of awareness in the community.

The meetings will continue to be held in the high school. The first and third Tuesdays of the month will be the regular meeting nights.

The meetings in August will continue on Mondays with Aug. 6 and 20 as the dates.

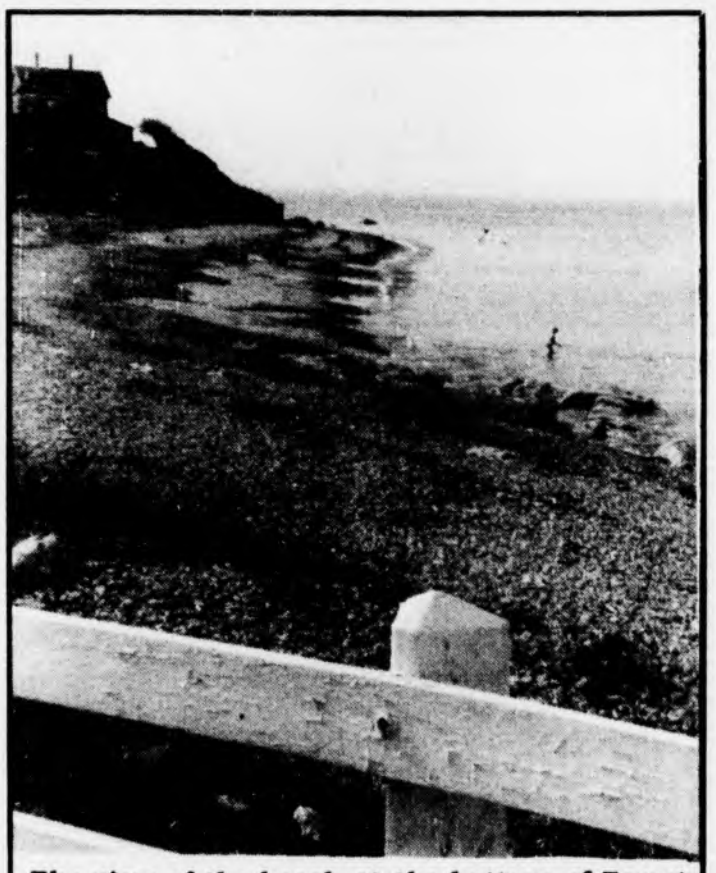
Never on a Wednesday

If you have business to transact with the treasurer-collector, don't visit town hall on a Wednesday.

By the narrowest of margins, selectmen reconsidered a previous decision and voted to allow the office to close it's door — and window — to public transactions all day on Wednesday in order to catch up with a backlog of paperwork.

Previously selectmen voted to close the office for a half day only. Selectman Diana Kornet pushed for the reconsideration, saying it was confusing to residents and inefficient for the office to be closed for only four hours.

Kornet was supported selectmen Jane Goedecke and Ned Tebbetts. Chairman Rocco Laugelle and Selectman Martha Gjesteby opposed both reconsideration and the full day closure.



"It puts an unfair burden on the rest of the departments to answer the phones," Gjesteby said. "I think you should close the whole town hall."

Goedecke challenged Gjesteby's position, saying "This is the only department with significant staff cuts." She described the treasurer-collector's office as the primary paper processor in town government.

Kornet added, "This is the department that most needs to work undisturbed."

Laugelle worried about the precedent. He said would rather have all the offices open or all of them closed.

The treasurer-collector's office will be closed to the public on Wednesday's until the paperwork is caught up.

A FIXATION WITH THE SPINE

If a spine suffers from fixation, it means that its normally-movable joints have restricted mobility. Back pain may result as tightened muscles and inelastic ligaments cause joints to become stuck in place. Spinal fixation may cause restricted movement in one or more directions. As a result, compromised movement places a greater strain on those joints which are fully capable of motion. This sets the stage for possible strains and irritation in otherwise healthy tissue. Unfortunately, no amount of exercise or stretching will alleviate the underlying fixation. The condition first must be evaluated by means of spinal X-rays and motion palpation. Once the chiropractor feels joint movement (or absence thereof) with his hands, he may initiate a specific manipulative procedure to promote normal mechanical action in the once-fixated joints.

Chief Brock replies to critics

billings in April. The department had been slowly working on the backlog from that time.

"Within two days of the last meeting [of the selectmen] we were able to turn everything in to the treasurer-collector," he said. Brock said he has had no information that would indicate that the banks refused to honor any of the checks that were deposited.

Brock said the department had instituted a process where the ambulance receipts are turned in on a weekly basis. The fire chief will prepare monthly reports for the town as well.

Although the department is able to cope with the task at present, Brock said this was the slow time of the year for a fire department. Later on, he said, "we might not have the time to dedicate."

Brock said the majority of the fire departments he has talked with use outside professional billing agencies. He suggested the town might want to consider going that route if a second statement issued at the end of July does not produce significant returns by late-August.

"The fire department is very good at operating the ambulance," Brock said. "Billing should go out to someone who does this professionally."

Brock also publicly complained about an editorial and a cartoon that ran in the Mariner.

"I've never played cards in the fire station and I've never seen any of my men play cards," Brock said. He called the cartoon an abuse of editorial license since it appeared to insinuate that he had misappropriated funds.

"There was never any intent to not turn the funds in," Brock said.

Brock also objected to an editorial in the same issue that suggested that the town might be better served by contracting with a private ambulance service.

"The paper tried to confuse the issues," he said.

The selectmen weren't entirely swayed by Brock's report and presentation.

"The computer was sort of a scapegoat," Selectman Diana Kornet said. "The selectmen didn't promise you a computer."

Although the selectmen supported the department's request for a computer, it was voted down at town meeting.

"What does the lack of a computer have to do with not depositing checks," Selectman Jane Goedecke demanded.

Brock said there was more involved than merely filling out a deposit slip and bringing the checks to the bank. He explained that there was a complete tracking system to be followed to record what was coming in.

Selectman Ned Tebbets accused Brock of showing "very poor judgment" in leaving $5,600 worth of checks and some cash undeposited.

"We hold you responsible as chief administrator," Kornet told Brock.

Selectman Martha Gjesteby wondered why the board hadn't gotten a red flag memo from one of the departments that should have been aware receipts were not coming in.

"The firefighters understood the billing would not be done until we got a computer," Brock said. "Each time [I spoke with the treasurer-collector and the accountant] I thought I was making myself plain that nothing was being done.

"I work 50 to 60 hours a week. I am not able to take on 20 hours of work," Brock said.

Brock also said the billings were extremely complex, involving third party billings and a lot of different systems.

"There is a two-inch thick binder of instructions for Medicare alone," he said.

Brock said the firefighters have volunteered to help Brock with the billing and they have received some training. He would not commit them to any responsibilities under a new contract.

"I don't know what view they would take now," Brock said.

Following the public hearing, the selectmen met with Brock in executive session. When they returned, they said they had voted to place a letter of reprimand in his file.

"We are satisfied," Chairman Rocco Laugelle said.

"It's clear it won't be happening again," Kornet added.

Meeting scheduled to discuss vandalism

"Vandalism and Litter in the Village and Harbor — What's to be done?" is the topic of an 8 a.m. meeting Tuesday (July 31) organized by The Village Renaissance. Hosted by Dan Leahy and Kimballs-by-the-Sea, the gathering will provide village merchants, businessmen and residents with an opportunity to begin addressing the problem of Vandalism and Litter — Who? What? When? Where? and Why?

Members of the grass roots organization have invited a member of the Cohasset police department to help sort through the problem as they try to find ways of combating it.

Anyone interested in participating in the discussion or with suggestions concerning it is welcome to attend the breakfast gathering. "We are trying to offer meetings at different times of the day so as many people as wish to can participate, so we are delighted that Kimballs is making a portion of their facility available to us at this hour," explains Jacqueline Dormitzer, Renaissance coordinator.

The Village Renaissance is a grass roots organization begun to stimulate interest in the historic village and harbor areas of Cohasset. Plans are well underway to build a water pump of cyprus or teak reminiscent of the original town pump which stood for years at the intersection of Elm and North Main streets. The idea, introduced at a Village Renaissance meeting several months ago, has caught the interest of many in Cohasset. "In fact, several individuals and groups associated with the Village have expressed an interest in helping fund the project and we hope to have construction completed this Fall," says Dormitzer.

Another project the Village Renaissance group has helped initiate is the delightful flower mural, painted by Cohasset High School students under the direction of Art Teacher Coleen Lucas, on the side of Tedeschi's. Additionally, Cohasset resident Virginia Ferenz is responsible for much of the town involved in organizing and planting the lovely flowers throughout the village area — an idea that originated in a Village Renaissance meeting last spring. Village merchants contributed to a fund that purchased the flowers in front of stores and businesses, as well as in the empty lot in the village center. Last spring, several groups picked up litter in the village and harbor areas. One group was co-ordinated by Jane White of Jane White Needlepoint at Smith Place and another by teens from Cohasset High School's Community Volunteer Service led by Melissa Christoffel.

Anyone interested in further information on the group and its projects may contact Jacqueline Dormitzer, Ann Whelan or Beth Christoffel.

Kierce receives honor

Daniel J. Kierce of Cohasset was inducted into the Delta Mu Delta Honor Society at the recent Nichols College honor society banquet.

The Delta Mu Delta is a national college honor society for students in business administration.

Kierce, a junior majoring in accounting at Nichols, is a member of the Zeta Alpha Phi Honors Society. A graduate of Cohasset Junior-Senior High School, he is the son of Christopher and Rose Kierce of 189 South Main Street.

It's a buyers market in Cohasset

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

Selling real estate in Cohasset is a sweetheart deal. The oceanfront and village are picture postcard perfect, the school system has a reputation for educational excellence and commuting distance to Boston is tolerable. With the current trends in housing, it's becoming downright affordable.

"Cohasset is just a beautiful corner of the world. It sells itself," said Peggy Smolko of Century 21 Atlantis Realty.

Buyers have a lot to choose from.

According to the Multiple Listing Service, there are 107 houses for sale in Cohasset. Prices range from $114,000 for a house on Route 3A to $2.4 million for one of Jerusalem Road's finest. Smolko said the master bedroom has a shower that is like a dance floor.

"It's just gorgeous," she said. The Jerusalem Road house is one of seven listing for more than $1 million.

Chris Ford, owner of Hallmark 100, said there have been 31 sales so far this year. The average selling price is $310,000. Cohasset has the highest average sale price in the region. The nearest competitors are Duxbury at $296,000, Norwell at $278,000, Hingham at $248,000 and Scituate at $203,000. The average for the region is over $177,000.

The more interesting statistic, said Ford, is that houses in Cohasset are selling at an average of 82 percent of the assessed value.

"Values have dropped one percent per month," Ford said. He said Cohasset is following a regionwide trend.

That news has been a bitter pill for homeowners to swallow, particularly if they are putting their homes on the market. The boomtime of the '80s when house values skyrocketed out of sight are gone.

"Those leaps had no economic justification," Ford said. "It was all speculative."

The bubble burst in 1987, led by the rapid decline of condominiums as investments. When the market was glutted with unwanted condos, values in the rest of the housing market plummeted.

Ford sees this as a necessary burning off of the market. He thinks real estate will return to its status as blue chip investment — solid and dependable.

Recognizing the market trend is essential for sellers. Both Ford and Smolko said it is essential for sellers to price their homes right.

"The seller must price it to be competitive," Ford said. "You must make sure it is in the number one position."

Price is only one part of the equation, according to Smolko. She said it is equally important to find an agressive, creative sales agent who can target the market.

Both agreed that buyers are more picky, more indecisive. They are looking at more houses and negotiating harder.

Ford said houses that are priced right will sell in four to six weeks. Other houses are lingering as long as five months. Ford is familiar with one property that has been on the market for more than three years.

One interesting statistic that came out of the Multiple Listing book is that oceanfront property is being listed an average of 22 percent above assessed value. This is in spite of claims by residents of these neighborhoods that they were grossly overassessed in the townwide revaluation.

Buyers looking for a big bargain might want to check out the Curtis Estate on Jerusalem Road. The property consists of 3 houses, a large barn and 55 acres with direct ocean views.

The estate, assessed for more than $1 million, has been on the market for $995,000. Last week the trustees of the estate dropped the asking price to $750,000.

According to broker Mary Pecci of Jack Conway & Associates, the property would make an ideal summer compound. Would-be buyers should be prepared to do some extensive renovations.

Smolko also encouraged first time buyers to come explore Cohasset. There's nothing like falling in love with perfection and finding out you can afford it.

Chart House won't get town-owned parking

abutters of any proposals for the parking lot in writing and by telephone.

"I don't feel we were notified properly," he said, complaining that the notice came from the Chart House rather than the selectmen.

Bonetti compared that to the process of certified, return receipt requested letters sent to abutters during the liquor license application.

The selectmen informed Bonetti that the process in liquor license applications was set by state law, but this was a very different matter.

"Why should the town pay," Selectmen Chairman Rocco Laugelle demanded.

"It is never the obligation of this office to notify persons of this town," Selectman Diana Kornet said. She told Bonetti it was the responsibility of residents to check the agendas the selectmen post in advance of meetings for issues of concern.

"I feel sorry a specific promise was made," Kornet said.

Bonetti also took issue with a bill for $12 he received for search time from the selectmen's office. He said he had spent "a good part of the morning pulling minutes" and then requested specific documents and copies of correspondence from town files.

"I couldn't have taken more time than four hours," he said.

Selectman Martha Gjesteby expressed surprise that a resident had been charged for search time.

"I've never heard of such a thing," she said.

Executive Secretary Greg Doyon explained that the town had the right to charge the fee. He said the fee was only charged in circumstances where it involved a considerable effort by town staff.

Doyon could not answer questions about the amount of time involved, who had done the search or who had prepared the bill.

Laugelle attempted to diffuse controversy over the search fee by instructing Doyon to investigate the situation and report back to the selectmen.

When Laugelle and Bonetti came to loggerheads over the issue, Bonetti challenged Laugelle, "You accused us of being the ones who would become unruly. We've given you the courtesy of finishing your statements."

When pressed to move on to a different topic, Bonetti said, "I won't let my taxpayer status get in the way."

Selectman Ned Tebbetts suggested a compromise site in the town parking lot. Hankinson worried that it would be difficult to provide security in a lot with so many entrances and exits.

Laugelle said the town parking lot could be a poor choice because of heavy use by people patronizing downtown merchants and restaurants and theatrical performances.

Chris Julian, 14 Parker Ave., asked if the change in style at the restaurant would result in a change in the parking situation. He suggested the town take a wait and see position.

"If it is a problem, then deal with it then," he said.

Hankinson countered that the town could allow the restaurant to use the parking lot for the first two weeks on a trial basis. He offered to meet with the residents and selectmen at the end of the trial period to work out any problems.

The selectmen preferred maintaining the status quo. Kornet proposed tabling any action until the second meeting in August.

Selectman Jane Goedecke said she was not eager to do favors for a new business the town had no track record with. She suggested the town hold off until after the summer season.

Kornet also asked Hankinson about the Howard Johnson-like appearance of the roof.

"That roof is one-quarter inch copper chemically aged about 20 years," Hankinson explained. "It will develop a dark green patina in time."

That time cannot happen soon enough for Kornet's tastes.

Hankinson apologized to the residents for any stress his request had produced.

"We just want to keep as many cars off the street as we can," he explained.

South Shore Coalition endorses railroad

By Anita Hill
Mariner correspondent

Having already voted in favor of the Old Colony Railroad Restoration project, the South Shore Coalition last week hashed over the project's environmental study and report.

Members voted to endorse the report, but added a list of common concerns voiced by member towns. Prior to the vote, they read comments from area planning boards and voiced opinions.

Present to support the report were Duxbury, Marshfield, Hull, Hanover, Norwell and Cohasset.

Hingham abstained from voting to endorse the report. Representatives presented a lengthy list of concerns, many of them unique to Hingham. Massachusetts Area Planning Council Representative Ed Bates also abstained.

Some of the environmental issues coalition members wanted MBTA authorities to note included the usage rate and/or restriction of herbicides and salt and oil on railbeds which run throughout member towns. The study addresses these concerns for the station site, but not the corridor itself.

What was of special concern were the aquifer areas and adjacent wetlands. These chemicals could filter down into the ground and pollute drinking water, and ruin vegetation and wildlife.

Duxbury Planner Anne Southward said she wanted to see containment of some sort for those substances. She suggested using some sort of filter or trap and also consulting local conservation commissions.

Though they supported the project's general concept, selectmen Martha Gjesteby (Cohasset) and Margaret Morris (Hanover) were concerned about its financial impact and the increasing cost of MBTA service.

Gjesteby also raised the issue of whether adequate parking was going to be provided by the project. Coalition Director Jean Christensen noted that planners in several area towns also questioned the adequacy of parking and were concerned that excess cars would be parked on town streets.

Bates, who had abstained, said that the MBTA did not have a concentrated overall plan for the region. He felt his group could not support the project because of the unknown financial impact on the region.

Hingham's list of concerns was the most lengthy. "We feel the report is deficient in many ways . . . and incomplete," said Selectman Edna English. "The impact on Hingham is enormous and its effect is essentially negative."

Aspects of the project most strongly objected to included the size of barriers to be placed near people's homes, the noise, the affects of vibrations on numerous historical home structures, and the loss of property values, followed by subsequent revenue losses for the town.

English also said public safety was a concern because grade crossings would cut the town in half and adversely affect responses to emergency calls.

Renovation of station off schedule

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

The renovation of the police/fire station is slightly off schedule, but renovation committee Chairman David Chase expects to send the work out to bid by mid-August.

Chase gave selectmen an update on progress to date. The committee has been working closely with the chiefs of both departments and the building inspector. The remaining issues, Chase said, "are all pretty minor and are being resolved."

Although the committee originally planned to advertise for bids on August 1, they are about two weeks behind schedule. Under the revised schedule, the committee would receive detailed bids on Sept. 7 and award the contract by the end of September. Construction would begin 10 days later.

Chase told the committee the only bad news to date was that the boiler needs to be replaced. Replacing the system during the renovation work would be cheaper and the town would recoup some of the costs through improved oil efficiency, he said.

Chase also broached the idea of the asbestos removal being done prior to the renovation work. He said it would be cheaper to contract directly with the removal firm rather than through a general contractor.

Asbestos removal is not a cheap operation under any circumstances. Chase estimated it might cost $25,000. Although the town included asbestos removal in the renovation budget, Chase asked if the town had any other available source of funds to complete the job.

"We would hope the board would find the money outside this project," Chase said. "I have a few other things I'd like to do in the building. I'm trying to move some dollars around."

The committee is also exploring the possibility of leasing communication equipment. That way, Chase explained, the committee could cut down on the capital outlay and secure state-of-the-art equipment for the departments. The committee is also researching how other communities manage joint stations. Chase expects the report will be ready at their next meeting.

The committee questioned the selectmen's insistence on a connecting door.

"We, as a committee, don't see the need for a door," Chase said. The committee particularly objected to placing it in the rear of the building because it would be a tremendous security risk. They would not object as much to placing the door in the day room area.

"It's a possible security risk wherever it is located," Chase said.

Fellow committee member Gerard Buckley, who is experienced in police work, concurred.

"I know a lot of nuts come into a police department," he said. "I don't want the responsibility [of insisting on a connecting door]."

Chase also informed selectmen that installing the door carries a substantial price tag. According to the architect, installing a door will cost $700 to $1,000.

One of the security features in the police department is an electronically controlled bay. The officer at the front desk opens the bay to admit a police vehicle. The bay will be sealed while a prisoner is discharged into the cell area.

Arranging for furniture and furnishings in the building is on the committee's agenda.

"Everybody is making a wish list," Chase said.

Tax deductions supported

A federal bill, allowing tax deductions for water and sewer fees, was given unanimous regional support last week by the South Shore Coalition.

Sponsored by the U.S. House of Representatives, the bill, called H. R. 4405, will attempt to amend the federal revenue code so that water and sewer fees are deductible in the same manner as local real property taxes.

Coalition members indicated they will also urge representatives to add the concept of a town's trash collection fee so that it is similarly deductible.

Only Hanover Selectman Margaret Morris dissented from this additional request. She said she "questioned the complexity" of tacking on a fee like municipal garbage disposal.

Hull's Selectman Jim Linville said he felt the trash "deductibility will assist in more fully implementing future recycling plans" for towns.

During their August session, the Coalition plans to assess the upcoming federal coastal zone management bill.

Sullivan replaces Brennock

Maureen Sullivan was appointed to fill the position as guidance secretary by school committee Monday night. She was one of 35 applicants for the job left open upon the retirement of Mary Brennock.

❑ Friends of the Chipman family of 43 Rust Way are sorry to see them leave. Steve, a dentist, has completed two years of specialized study in Boston, and it is now time to return home to Arizona. Steve and Jeanne and sons, Steven and Kenny, tell us they have loved living in Cohasset and wish they could stay "forever." Also, as Mormons, they have enjoyed being involved in the youth programs at the local "LDS" church (The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints).

❑ Sheila Long, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Edmonds, is here for a few days vacation. Sheila has her daughter with her. Sheila is a graduate of CHS and Mass General Hospital School of Nursing.Former Army Nurse, Sheila did a tour of duty in Vietnam at the 85 medical evacuation hospital in Oui Whou. She is now a medical consultant for an insurance company.

❑ Congratulations go to Jessica Sammon, a freshman at CHS who just returned from three weeks in Cotswold England Youth Hostel Group bicycling. Jessica made friends from all over the East Coast! Sounds like grand fun!

❑ Don't forget that this Sunday, July 29th, the Historical Society is presenting a walking tour of Cohasset's historic Town Common and center village. The unique history will be explored during the walk. The tour will meet at the Common's Meetinghouse at 2 p.m. and will end at the Society's Captain John Wilson House and Maritime Museum on Elm Street in the village. All are invited and admission to the walk is free.

❑ Joel Carpenter sure has a lot of friends that are rooting for him "around town." Everyone must have seen all of the nifty posters, balloons and other decorations that were there to greet him, a neat idea for a family to see how much they are loved. Joel is six, and back home after undergoing successful bone marrow transplant surgery at Children's hospital in Boston. Even though Joel cannot have visitors yet, we'll bet that he would love to receive lots of cards! He lives with his mom and dad on Heather Drive, you can imagine how thrilled and happy they are to have their son home after a 79 day hospital stay!! Get well soon Joel!!!

As you know, Mr. Newkirk teaches history at the CHS; he is planning to study Black-African literature as a reflection of conflict between Western and African values.

❑ Here's hoping we hear the results of the women's division Bay State Games . . . Noella Roma and Tara Gallagher were trying to win this past weekend, and we certainly hope that they did as well as they always do!! Their coach, Ruthann Sargent, knows that they will do well!!

Designed for incoming freshmen and transfer students, orientation is an opportunity for students to become acquainted with the Emmanuel College campus and experience academic and campus life first-hand.

❑ This month will be a sad one at the end, Mary Brennock will be retiring from the guidance department at CHS! She has had a 21-year career with the school system, and has been dearly loved and admired for all 21 of them. We will all be thinking of you on July 31, your last day, Mary, and we wish you a wonderful retirement. You will be missed.

❑ That's the news from here, please let me know what is going on in your house this week, then watch for it to appear in print!!

School committee approves a philosophy

A detailed philosophy statement explaining what a Cohasset education is all about was adopted by school committee Monday night.

Most of the wording has already been approved by the faculty, however, one area will go back to the staff for another vote before the start of school.

It was the third time the committee went over the statement. The vote was unanimous.

The wording on goals for foreign languages was altered slightly but School Supt. Stephen Hart said he does not expect the change in wording will be a problem when presented to the faculty for a vote.

As adopted the statement says:

As we enter the last decade of the 20th century, Cohasset High School has a vision for its students, faculty and community. Cohasset High School shall enable each student to understand the past, examine the present, and prepare for the future.

Cohasset High School seeks to graduate students who will recognize their abilities, develop a love of learning, fulfill their potential and use their talents to meet post-high school goals. We believe Cohasset students should be confident enough to explore, discover, create, think critically, and communicate effectively. We believe that Cohasset students, by developing a strong sense of honor and integrity, will behave ethically, act responsibly in the community, and demonstrate concern for global issues.

Cohasset High School believes that excellent schools require excellent teachers who possess a high degree of knowledge, sensitivity, creativity, and dedication to both their students and their own professional development. Excellent schools also require an excellent and committed staff of trained specialists, counselors, technicians, administrators, and a school committee sensitive to educational needs.

Cohasset High School recognizes that quality education is best accomplished in partnership with the parents and the community. As partners in this total school-community compact, we endeavor to create an environment that promotes learning. Further, Cohasset High School recognizes its unique responsibility as the town's major educational institution and facility.

General Goals:

Cohasset High School adopts the following as its stated goals:

1. Physical and Emotional Well-Being

A Cohasset High School education should contribute to the learner's physical and emotional well-being, especially to a sense of personal worth.

2. Communication Skills

A Cohasset High School education should develop in each learner the reading, writing, listening, speaking and computational skills necessary for effective communication in a variety of media. Students will develop the ability to think critically and to express themselves clearly and creatively.

3. Performance Skills

A Cohasset High School education should provide a broad range of opportunities for student performance in the arts, in athletics, and in public forums so that students may develop leadership abilities and both individual and group performance skills.

4. Citizenship in a Democratic Society

A Cohasset High School education should provide each learner with knowledge and understanding of how our society functions and should foster individual commitment to exercise the rights and responsibilities of citizenship.

5. Values and Mutual Respect

A Cohasset High School education should foster an appreciation of the essential similarities and interdependence of all human beings and promote behavior that advances the dignity of all people, advocating both individual rights and the common good.

6. Arts Appreciation and Creativity

Keep reading

This week the school committee accepted a fine report from the elementary reading curriculum evaluation committee.

They were polite and appreciative.

We just hope they find some way to implement it.

The report talks about the different learning styles. It asks that a reading supervisor be hired to oversee the elementary program.

The school committee didn't disagree with the recommendation. As Barbara Bliss, committee chairman, said: "It's not financially feasible."

She went on to commend the committee and the faculty for working around the problem.

Kenneth Eckberg, principal of Deer Hill and a member of the committee, pointed out that back in 1987 a similar evaluation had taken place and similar recommendations were made.

He said more needs to be done to work on the issue of coordination. He did say much has happened to improve over the past 15 years.

Back in 1975 there were 12 to 15 reading texts in use in the school system. Now one series, the Macmillan "Connections" readers are in use in grades 2 through 6.

Supplementary material is available.

At a time when the school budget is stretched thin, it is good to hear that these attempts at improving the basic educational program are still continuing.

The focus on learning styles sounds great on paper. And it is nice to hear there will be some attempt made through the release day program to offer teachers more information on learning styles.

We know the new principal of Osgood, Linda Whitney, will have quite a bit to learn about the system. We hope that she will be able to give the reading curriculum high priority once she gets settled.

We know there won't be a quick end to the financial crunch facing the school system.

Reading is basic. All our children need to learn to read and read well. The information is available to help teachers reach the children who learn by methods slightly out of the mainstream.

We think the committee deserves our thanks for the work to date. Incidentally, this work was accomplished at least partly by the use of substitute teachers filling in to give the staff time to work. We hope to see more of the same.

The reading evaluation committee included: Marilee Cantelmo, Jack Creamer, Marilyn D'Angelo, Shirley Tewkesbury, Marian Atkinson, Kenneth Eckberg, Pauline Gallagher, Patricia Sullivan, Joan Magoun and Betty Cisneros.

The emphasis in the elementary reading program is moving toward a more individualized approach – one that depends on knowing a pupil's specific learning style.

Three members of the elementary reading curriculum evaluation committee appeared before the school committee Monday night at the high school to talk about their recommendations.

The committee itself consisted of 10 staff members who worked on providing coordination of the reading programs in the Osgood and Deer Hill schools.

Some of the items in the report have already been planned for in the present school budget.

For instance, School Superintendent Stephen Hart told the committee that a tool to identify a child's learning style has been selected. Funds are allocated in the budget.

The report was accepted with the school committee's thanks but the recommendation on hiring a reading coordinator was met with little hope due to the financial crunch.

RR's neighbors protest revival

Editor's Note: A copy of the following letter was submitted to the Mariner for publication.

We too are of the majority who appreciate the need to improve commuter transportation but quite literally not in my back yard. One corner of our house stands inches from the path to be cut to reestablish the Old Colony Line. That same corner was there thirty years ago when the trains came rambling through. There was nothing quaint about the noises and the smells that filled our house at both ends of the day. The day they stopped running was a great event for my family as we got a chance to enjoy the peace and quiet that most everyone in the town comes to take for granted. Now the state wants to take us backwards which seems to be its favorite direction these days. According to their literature, houses which are not within "acceptable noise and vibration levels" can have this problem alleviated by one of three measures, any one of which enforces the feeling of being held prisoner in our own home: a 16-foot barrier inches from our windows; double glazing windows literally darkening our door; or an air conditioner precluding ever opening windows to let fresh air in. The final adding of insult to injury comes with the announcements that we are faced with increased state and federal taxes which in part will be used to railroad this project through. It doesn't pay to be among the silent majority these days. Thanks for lending an ear.

Another neighbor doesn't mind the RR

To the Editor:

What a great article for the railroad! We need the train with no doubts in our minds. Imagine how much gas, wear and tear, and pollution could be saved on our cars if the trains were allowed. Not only would there be less traffic on 3A but there would be less accidents in the winter from ice on the roads. We would save money for the town by less ambulances and fire trucks reporting to these 3A accidents caused by too many commuters trying to go home or to work.

I myself live near the old trackbed and I wouldn't mind a little noise and rumble everyday to save the commuters headaches and money. I also walk to work everyday in the village so I wouldn't use the train myself but I pity all the commuters I see every morning speeding their way into a Boston bound traffic jam. The train might also keep some young and older people off the roads when they are finished partying after work which could result in safer highways for the more sober people.

The train could also be used for quicker delivery of mail, assorted merchandise, and even fresh fruit, the list is endless. Wouldn't it be great to hop off a plane at Logan and hop on a train that would drop you off in Cohasset and not some other place? The pros outweigh the cons so let's bite the bullet and forge ahead and not backwards.

Taxpayers' Guide answers questions

"Many taxpayers turn to their elected representative when they have a question or problem with their state taxes. Indeed, one of the most important functions of the problem resolution office is to handle legislators' referrals promptly. While PRO continues to be at your service, the Department's latest publication, A Taxpayers' Guide to the Department of Revenue (D.O.R.), may well be of use to you answering many routine questions about tax administration," stated Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, R-Cohasset.

Geared toward the average taxpayers rather than the accountant or tax lawyer, the guide answers a long-expressed need for a general primer on how the system works and, perhaps most importantly, what appeal rights taxpayers have under the law. While tax administration is never simple, it is every taxpayer's right to have basic procedures fully explained in plain English. Taxpayers also have fundamental right to know — in writing — their rights to appeal a DOR decision.

"The taxpayers' guide is particularly timely given many legislators' interest in "Massachusetts Taxpayer Bill of Rights," akin to what exists federally. The DOR is very much in favor of a state version of the federal taxpayer bill of rights. Such a statute would go a long way toward making permanent many of the reforms that we have instituted administratively; it would also give taxpayers an extra assurance that their interests are fully protected," Rep. Murray continued.

"The guide sets forth a commitment to provide a complete, yet easy-to-follow roadmap through the audit, collection and appeals processes; these booklets are readily available at all of the libraries in my district. If you have a use for this publication, stop by the library and pick one up at no charge," she concluded.

Too bad sitcom star Roseanne Barr canceled her appearance at the Music Circus. A heavier-than-usual turnout had been expected.

Cohasset Agrees CARE to Recycle Everything

By Alix White
Special to the Mariner

Do you remember our Earth Day pledge to adopt a litter site? Many readers have asked me to remind us to make periodic visits to continue to keep those areas clean. Those who have been continuing with their adoption pledge have been picking up bagfulls of "disposable" items such as cans, plastic wrap, diapers, and plastic six-pack rings. These items are devastating to marine and wildlife.

This state is in a disposal crisis. We understand this in Cohasset, and have responded by making recycling mandatory. We now have the ability to reduce our average trash load by 80%. We achieve these high figures in two areas: the marketplace and the Recycling/Transfer Facility (RTF). In the marketplace, we buy items that are reusable and ultimately recyclable like cloth diapers instead of "disposable" plastic/paper ones. We also attempt, where possible, to not buy overpackaged products made of non-recyclable material such as convenience foods packaged in plastics of many different resins. As users of the RTF, we have become near experts in chasing arrows symbols, snipping off metal rings on glass jars, rinsing out containers (with just a little water), composting our leaves and grass clippings, not to mention looking sideways at cardboard to see if it has waves,and putting our newspaper in paper bags. We have become recycling pros, but still we have tons of trash, and still we need better markets for our recycled materials. When we have done all that we can, what are we left with? Packaging.

This year over 100,000 Mass. citizens signed a Recycling Initiative petition to be placed on the ballot in November. It mandates that by 1996, all packaging be reusable, made from at least 50% recycled materials, or be made from recyclable materials. Our Board of Health members signed this petition.

Unfortunately, the state Supreme Judicial Court has ruled that the Recycling Initiative cannot appear on the November ballot, because of a technicality surrounding one signature on the original ballot. Barring a successful appeal, the only recourse lies in the passage of House Bill 4456, an act to promote Environmentally Acceptable Packaging, the legislative version of the Recycling Initiative.

The state does not need to be in this solid waste crisis. We have set the example in waste reduction but we cannot do this as an isolated town. House Bill 4456, Environmentally Acceptable Packaging, is the first step. Call or write state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray, 722-2400 and Senator Bill Golden, 722-1646 urging them to vote in favor of House Bill 4456, An Act to Promote Environmentally Acceptable Packaging.

Office for children tries to avoid tax axe

Now that the State Supreme Court has determined the constitutionality of the tax package, the future of Massachusetts Office for Children's two programs, the statewide Help for Children and Community Development programs, hang in balance in the Conference Committee as the final recommendations for the FY'91 state budget are hammered out. Both programs, totalling a little over $1.8 million with 62 workers, were supported in the budget proposals of the governor and the house of representatives. In sharp contrast, the senate Ways and Means Committee eliminates these programs, despite the solid support received from 26 senators, including local senators William B. Golden and Paul D. Harold.

George Bachrach, chairperson of OFC's statewide advisory council said, "Help for Children and Community Development form the state's "safety net" for children. If they are lost, it will be a giant step backward for Massachusett's children. It will eliminate the children's voice from state government — a voice to which the Commonwealth has been committed since 1972. It seems to me that especially when money is tight, we need to maintain our commitment to safeguarding the interests of our children."

The Help for Children Program is the state's only free and confidential information, referral and follow-up advocacy service for parents and children. In FY'89, HFC handled 63,624 calls from parents and assisted 5,644 severely troubled or multiply handicapped children get the help they needed.

The Community Development Program supports 41 local Councils for Children representing more than 2,000 citizens who volunteer their time to improve children's lives. As one of their projects in the last year, both Coastline and South Shore Councils for Children serving the ten towns of Braintree, Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Milton, Norwell, Quincy, Randolph, Scituate and Weymouth, expanded the Parents Advisory Council Network made up of parents of children with special needs, held a forum on resources for parents of children with special needs; and developed, printed and distributed a 1990 PAC Directory. Both Councils also documented state cuts to child care services in the 10 towns and will soon be releasing its report entitled, STOP.

In the last year, 10 local Office for Children offices and one regional office have been closed. "We had already made hard choices," said commissioner Mary Kay Leonard: "We had heard what the public has been saying about the escalating costs of government, and trimmed our administrative and operating costs to the bone. If community-based staff are let go, the Commonwealth's families and children will suffer."

Three new elementary teachers win space at Osgood

Three new elementary teachers were appointed by school committee Monday. One of the teachers is to take the place of a retiring teacher. The other two are to assume new classes due to increasing enrollment at Osgood School.

There will now be five sections in grade 1 and 2.

There were more than 200 applicants for the positions.

Cynthia Hurley, who taught Grade 1 last year at Osgood as a long-term substitute, was hired again since the incoming class is as large as last year's. Hurley has a masters' degree as well as previous teaching experience.

Patrice Donnelly, who is finishing her masters' work at Simmons, was hired. She will teach grade 2. She has experience teaching on the college level and has taught in the Sharon summer enrichment program.

Barbara Wells, who has taught in schools in New York and Rhode Island, was also hired. She will teach grade 2. She is planning to relocate to this area.

Cohasset hockey team loses to Whitman-Hanson

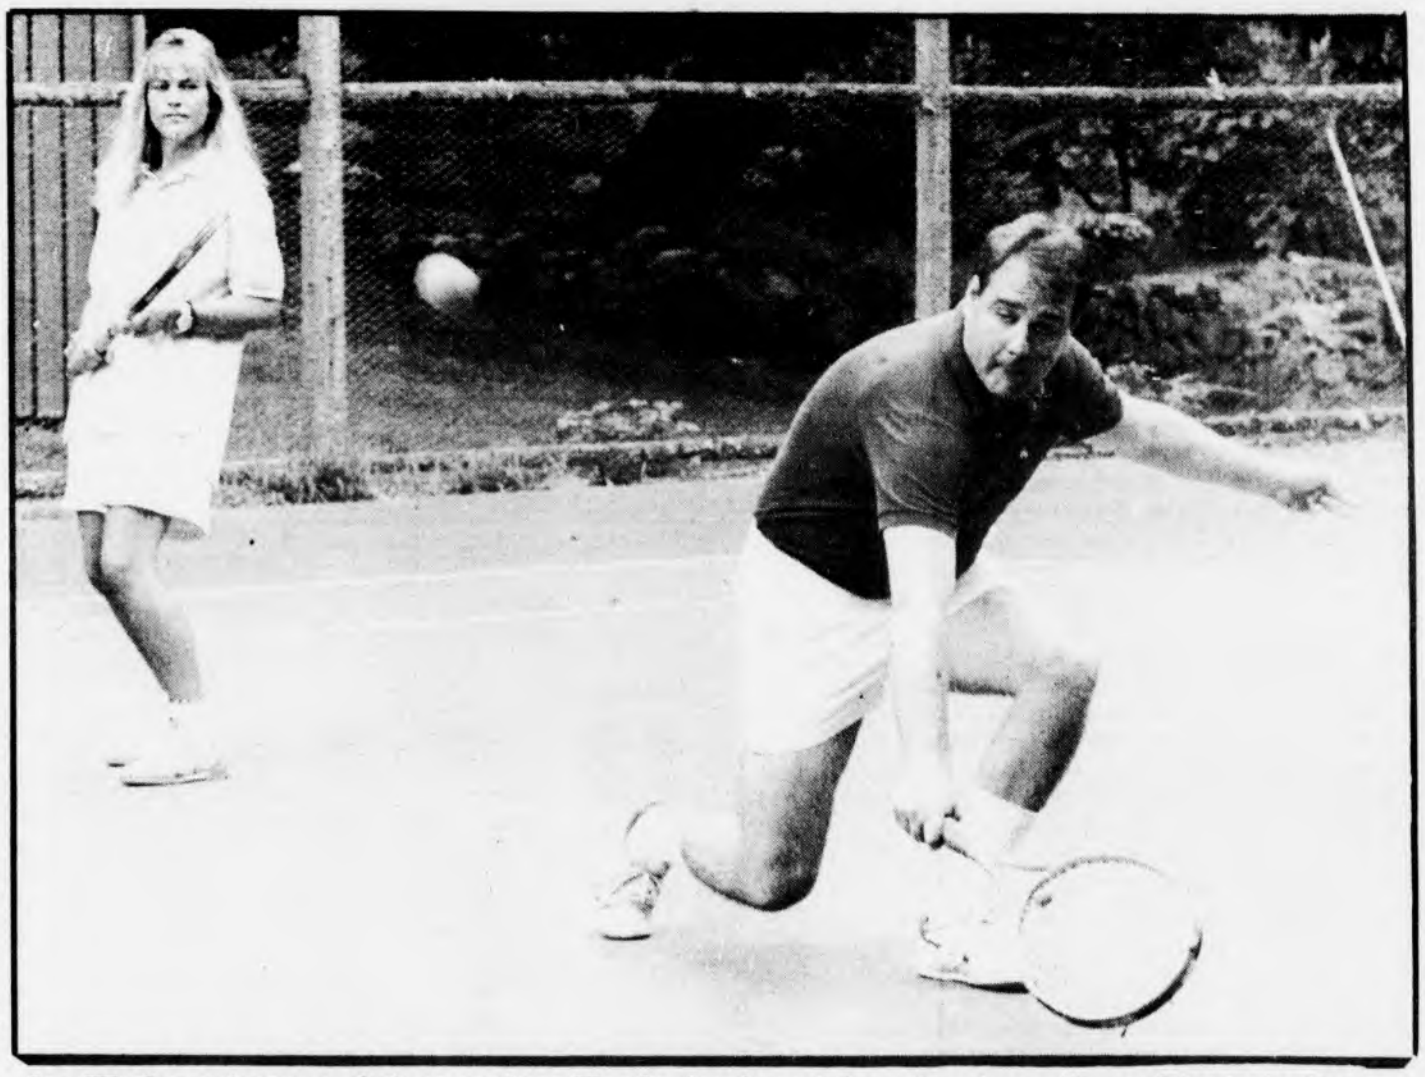
By John Kinchla

Cohasset's hockey fortunes turned sour last week, when the local entry in the Pilgrim Summer Youth Hockey program, the "Christy's" lost to Whitman-Hanson by a score of 3 to 0.

Playing with uncharacteristic temerity, the Christy's failed to keep Whitman-Hanson away from their goal. Whitman scored in the first period on a shot off the faceoff within the Cohasset zone.

The temperature outside was in the 90's and the Christy's appeared to be sluggish. Fog began to envelop the arena and the ice surface became soft. Skating became more of an effort after Whitman's initial first strike.

The Christy's made many good rushes into the Whitman end but failed to score. Mike Noble, Mike Reynolds and Kevin Mulcahy led the Christy's back with several rink-long rushes but they never tallied.



To the Christy's credit, they played three forward lines against Whitman-Hanson's two forward lines. The result of this unselfishness was that all the boys played almost equal time. The disadvantage was that the Christy's had an unbalanced attack throughout the contest.

As the team experiences success, more skaters have elected to try out for the team. Since the Christy's is a developmental squad, most of the less experienced boys have played as much as the veterans.

Playing a particularly strong game for the team were Charlie Smith, Brian Donovan, Scott Varisco and Charlie Shields. All the boys tried to work in concert against the Panthers.

Cohasset is now mathematically tied with Whitman-Hanson for the league lead, though Cohasset has played 1 fewer game. Cohasset is ahead of Whitman-Hanson in the vital categories of goals scored vs goals against.

A turnaround may happen this week when the Christy's take-on a tough Stoughton team.

Joe Whelan returns a shot as partner Wendy Jarvis watches. The two will participate in the Cohasset Benefit Tennis Tournament for Children's hospital Aug. 4 and 5.

Players rush to football

Now that varsity football is no longer offered, more students are interested in the sport.

School Superintendent Stephen Hart told school committee Monday that 38 students are going out for football this year. Even with the larger turnout, football will be only played at the junior varsity level this fall.

Hart pointed out that the decision to suspend varsity playing was due to the lack of upper classmen on the team. Only one member of last year's varsity team was a junior. The rest of the varsity squad graduated.

The same number of football coaches will be hired. There was no planned cut in the budget.

Most of the junior/senior high school coaches for the coming school year were given school committee approval Monday.

Several positions remain to be filled but the major sports are accounted for.

The coaches appointed are: Ruthanne Sargent, cheerleading and gymnastics; Dennis Walsh, hockey; Ted MacDermott, baseball; James Franey, golf; Torin Sweeney, wrestling; Kennen Startzell, girls' varsity soccer; Frank Blonde, girls' j.v. soccer; Dan Magner, boys' varsity soccer and girls' j.v. basketball; Larry Shultz, boys' j.v. soccer; Phil Pisano, head football coach; Ted MacDermott, assistant football coach; Robert Silvia, assistant football coach; Debbie Bostwick, varsity field hockey and girls' varsity basketball; Arnie Repucci, boys' varsity basketball; Matt Salerno, boys' j.v. basketball; Michael Gill, varsity softball; Marilyn Watson, j.v softball; Betty Zadel, girls' tennis; Ed Amaral, boys' tennis; Ron Emmons, head girls' track coach, and Tom O'Neil, assistant girls' track coach.

Swim team wins by forfeit

The Cohasset swim team's third meet of the season, which was to occur on July 20, was a win for Cohasset by forfeit as its opponent, Duxbury Harbor Yacht Club, was unable to compete.

The club's next meet will be against Scituate K of C at Scituate, on Friday, July 27.

An intersquad meet was held on Wednesday, July 18 with the team divided into red, white and blue squads. It was a fun-filled morning in which everyone, including the coaches, participated.

The stars of the week for this week are: 8 and under: Jeff Schneider and Sara Senechal; 10 and under: Andrew Singleton and Maura McLeod; 12 and under: Kevin Duffy and Emily Henderson; 14 and under: Scott Theriault and Becky Golden; and 16 and under: Chip Anderson. The stars of the week, chosen by coaches, Kate Anderson and Sara Tague, are those swimmers who have shown determination and improvement.

Cohasset meets its toughest opponents to date

By John Smoot
Special to the Mariner

Cohasset's nine-year-old team met its toughest opponents to date when they played Duxbury and Braintree American. The Cohasset Cardinals, sponsored by the Mass 4 x 4 Association, lost one game and tied the other in an exciting week of baseball. Cohasset played without power hitter Jamie DeMichele who broke two fingers earlier in the week. Jamie may be out of action for the remainder of the season.

COHASSET 8 — BRAINTREE AMERICAN 8

"There's many a slip twixt the cup and the lip." Homer's genius was never more evident than last Friday night when Cohasset took the sweet taste of victory from the lips of the much heralded and still undefeated Braintree American team. Braintree American, coached by WWF wrestler Gorgeous Baby Cakes Chris Duffy, entered the last inning leading Cohasset 8 to 4 when the Cohasset team put on their rally caps and went to work. O'Sullivan, Schwerin, Rossi, Hanian, and Rooney all had base hits and in between hits Golden walked, Smoot took a pitch to the helmet and Taylor handcuffed Braintree's first baseman with a sharply hit ground ball. The end result was a four run rally to tie the game. Under Suburban Youth Baseball League rules the game ends after six innings even if the score is tied.

Greg "Robo-Pitch" Taylor threw yet another three shutout innings. He struck out four and allowed only one hit. With the summer season half over Taylor is still unscored upon. Denis Rooney and Justin Golden kept Cohasset close with strong pitching efforts over the first three innings.

Michael "Magnet Man" Rossi raised his batting average to .313 with his dramatic bases loaded single in the last inning. The Magnet has played four different positions and the ball seems to follow him wherever he goes. Hanian and Rooney followed Rossi with dramatic base hits of their own. Throughout Cohasset's last inning fireworks Braintree's fielders played superb defense, limiting the Cohasset base runners to one base per hit. In fact, Braintree's defensive effort was remarkable throughout the game, especially when they executed double plays in both the third and fourth innings.

Jim O'Sullivan had another perfect night at bat with two hits and a walk in three trips to the plate. His batting average over five games is an astronomical .615.

DUXBURY 7 — COHASSET 4

Earlier in the week Cohasset had experienced its own last inning heartbreak when Duxbury escaped with a 7-4 victory. Cohasset led 3-2 after 5 and 1/3 innings. The team demonstrated its character by handling this tough loss with class and an upbeat spirit.

Ben Roine

Greg Taylor tossed three shutout innings but not without tremendous support in the field. Justin "the Magician" Golden was outstanding at shortstop and had five put outs in the first three innings alone. Steve "Bo" Kovack smoothly handled a sharply hit ground ball and tossed out Duxbury's power hitter to end the third inning. Eric Hanian killed a Duxbury rally in the fourth inning when he snared a scorching line drive and Denis "Rainmaker" Rooney's fifth inning catch in right field brought the Cohasset crowd to its feet.

Duxbury pulled off some defensive heroics of its own, especially in the fourth inning when they gunned down two Cohasset runners at the plate by perfect execution of throws from the outfielder to the cutoff man to the catcher.

Cohasset's Ben Roine continues to have an uncanny knack for running the base paths. His on base percentage after five games is .824. If it stays that high the league may commence an investigation.

The 10-year-olds wreaked vengence on both Abington 11 to 6, and Duxbury 10 to 9.

Against Abington pitcher Matt Lewis had 7 strikeouts, while heavy hitting Paul Michael Quinton continued to rip the ball at a torrid pace i.e.: 3 hits and 3 RBI's. Outfielder Ben Ketchum had a solid hit and continued to field superbly. Catcher Scott VanHartsvelt was also outstanding in the batters box and behind the plate as he had 1 hit and 1 RBI. Brian Walsh contributed with a hit and an RBI.

Against Duxbury, Pitcher Colton Ralston twirled 4 strong innings. The Cohasset win was accomplished with both good fielding and good hitting. Once again, Greg Bilton, Matt Lewis and Paul Michael Quinton powered the ball for Cohasset. Scott VanHartesvelt caught another great game and threw out several runners attempting to advance to second base. Matt Lewis iced the win for Cohasset with 2 innings of relief.

Gene Peterson plays at golf for his livihood

November. He has from December to April off. During that time, he heads to Florida and plays more golf.

"The winter months are when I get to play the most," he said. "I'll go to Florida or stay around the area."

As for the par 72 course at the Golf Club, Peterson said, "It is a typical Donald Ross course. (Ross designed the course.) There are small undulating greens and the fairways are nice."

Asked how the course rates to others in the area, Peterson said, "I don't know I don't really get a chance to play too many of the other courses in this area."

There are 360 members of the Cohasset Golf Club. Peterson said the members take the game seriously but enjoy themselves as well.

"We have a mix of serious players but most are out there to have fun," he said.

In recent years golf has seen a surge in popularity. Peterson has seen this at the club.

"Golf has really hit a boom. This place is packed most every day," he said. "But I think its popularity is a cyclical thing. A little while ago tennis was real big. Now golf is big. But it is a good game to play and many can enjoy it."

In addition to golf, the Cohasset Golf Club offers tennis for its members and lessons as well.

As for Peterson, when not at the Golf Club he will be working on his game in preparation for the New England PGA Pro-Am this August at the Woodland and Wellesley Country Clubs.

Cohasset sailors sweep at Volvo championship

It was a clean sweep for the Cohasset sailors in the Volvo New England Fleet 210 Championships held last weekend in Newport, Rhode Island.

Jim Summers and Rick Schultz captained their boat to first place.

Both are former national champions in 210 competition.

Tom Hamilton, the Cohasset's fleets defending champion, came in second.

And Fred Baker completed the sweep as he took third place.

"I think the 1-2-3 finish reflects the talent that we have in Cohasset," Fleet member George Watts said. "It was a very good showing for Cohasset."

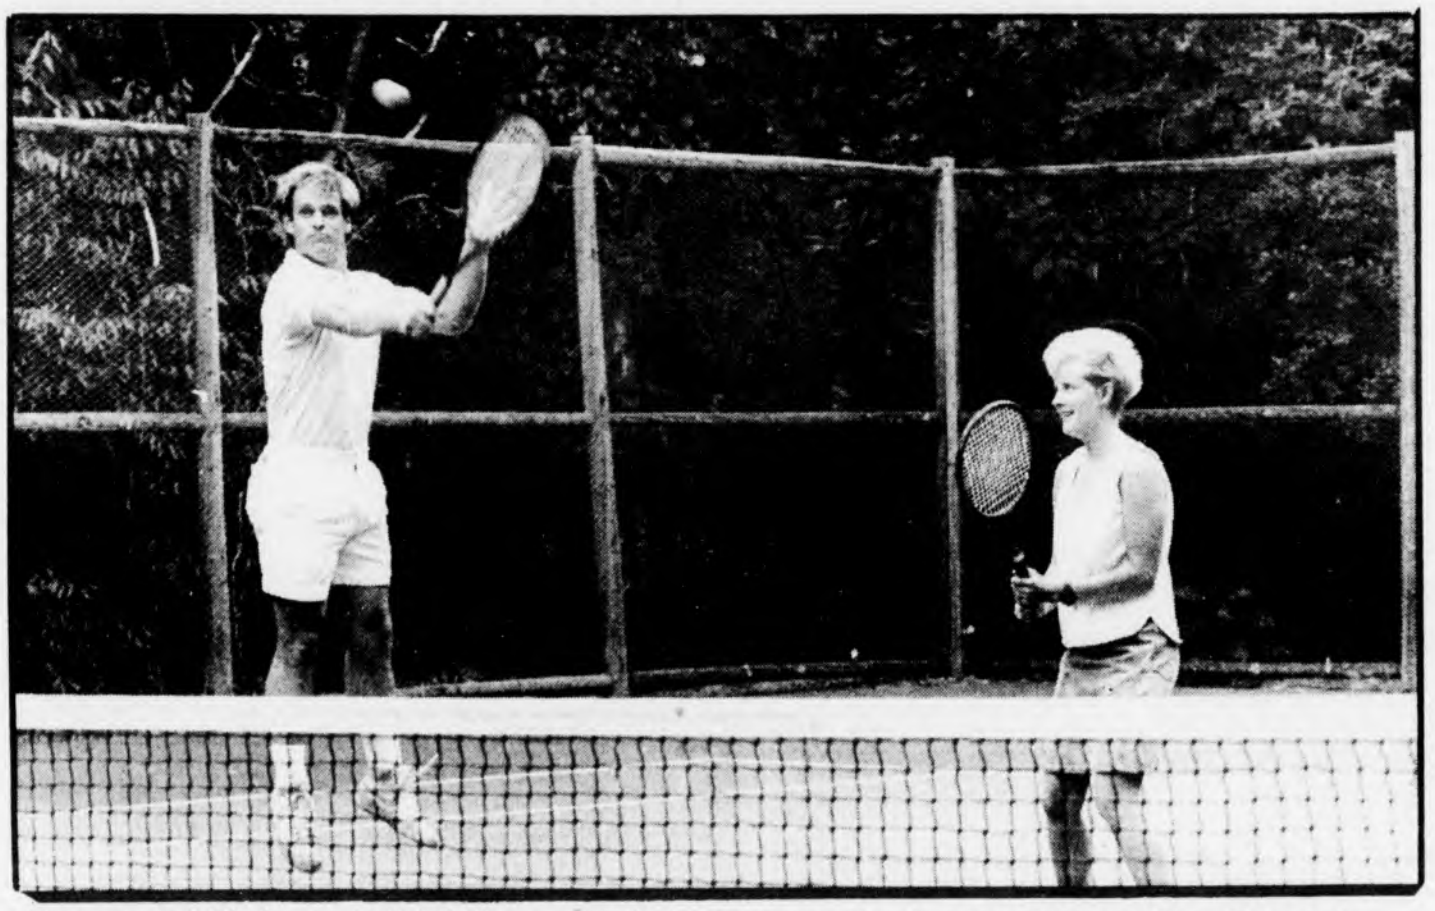
The national championships will be held in August in Falmouth, Mass.

As for the regular weekly competition, two races were held last weekend.

In the first race Don Clark and Watts sailed to first place.

Fran Charles came in second.

And Sarah Leggat finished in third place.



In the second race Charles sailed to first.

Sam Wakeman pulled in second.

And Leggat came in third.

There are six more weekends of racing for the Cohasset Fleet 210.

"It's still an open competition," Watts said. "There have been a variety of winners and high finishers throughout the year. It's still anyone's race."

Railroad issues chug along attracting attention

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

When representatives from the Old Colony railroad project came to Cohasset to address residents' concerns about the railroad, they must have felt like they had run into one of those ambushes in the Saturday matinee westerns. The representatives included Ernie Deeb from the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority, Pamela Wolfe from Sverdrup, the engineering consultant firm, and Barry Faulkner of Cambridge Systematics, a consultant to the project.

Residents living along the railroad right of way questioned everything from the dependability of the financing to the safety of their homes. When they left the meeting, no one appeared to have been converted to another point of view.

Brian McKenney, 45 Spring St., called the project an outmoded technology that will run from early in the morning to late at night, bringing with it warning bells, horns, lights, miles of chain link fencing and chemical defoliants.

"I know it doesn't make economic sense," he said. "And they're going to get a blank check from Cohasset.

Paul Carlson, 18 Old Coach Rd., contended the 270 commuters expected to ride the train could be served better and more cheaply by an improved commuter boat system.

David Ralff and Janet Warren were more emphatic in their opposition. Ralff's home on Lantern Lane is near the rock at the intersection of Spring and Pond Streets that the town suggested should be removed for safety's sake if the railroad comes through.

"If you blow up the rock and my house falls down, do I have to sue you or will you just pay me?" Ralff demanded three times. Wolfe tried to placate Ralff.

"The MBTA will take all appropriate action to protect abutting property and uses," she said. Ralff was not convinced.

Janet Warren, 323 North Main St., lives in the only home in Cohasset within the noise corridor. The proposals by the T to "noise-proof" her home involves 16-foot fencing.

"We'll never see the sun again," Warren said. Wolfe offered to set up a meeting to discuss the options for noise proofing, but Warren said she wasn't ready for that yet.

Other than the selectmen, the only support for the train was contained in a petition from merchants on the South Shore. Several Cohasset merchants signed the petition, but did not speak up at the meeting.

The selectmen were favorably disposed to the notion of mass transit, but wanted guarantees about financing and future town assessments. The selectmen proposed that riders bear a greater percentage of the operating costs through increased fares.

They also raised concerns about flooding in the proposed parking lot on Pleasant Street, safety at several private and public crossings and the need for a vehicle-activated traffic light at the station entrance on Route 3A. Lastly, they asked if the MBTA could install wooden fencing along with the chain-link fencing to provide a sound barrier and improve the aesthetics.

Selectman Martha Gjesteby told Wolfe she was particularly concerned about the cul de sac style developments that have sprung up. She worried about the safety of the children living in those areas.

Wolfe promised the intersection of Pond Street and Spring Street will receive close scrutiny by project engineers.

Selectmen had asked about the possibility of reserving parking spaces for shoppers and theater goers. Gjesteby said the San Francisco commuter rails provide that kind of service. According to Wolfe, the MBTA cannot do that. The parking lots are not staffed as a cost-saving measure and all parking is first come, first served, she said.

Wolfe said the MBTA will work with property owners abutting the rail right-of-way regarding fence installation. Although wooden stockade fences are aesthetically pleasing, she warned that they would do nothing to cut down on noise.

Installing fencing other than the chain-link proposed by the MBTA would be possible, but abutters would have to bear the costs and maintain the fencing.

Wolfe invited residents of Cohasset to visit a community with an MBTA commuter rail and ride the train, particularly in a community similar to Cohasset.

"We will go out with you, assist you," she promised.

Free mortgage booklet

Premiere Funding, a mortgage consulting firm located at 714 Jerusalem Road, is offering free of charge a booklet entitled What Is a Mortgage Consultant?

The brochure compares the role of a mortgage consultant to that of a travel agent, since both are paid by commission, not by the client. A mortgage consultant, according to the booklet, is someone who helps homeowners structure loans that best suit their needs. Mortgage consultants typically work with many different lending institutions nationally and regionally to find the best rates and terms.

Major reasons for using a mortgage consultant, as described in the booklet, include the fact that the consultant will do most of the legwork in gathering documentation needed for approval of your loan, their ability to identify loan sources from around the country, and because mortgage consultants will typically come right to your home to conduct business.

The brochure also presents questions to ask when seeking a mortgage consultant, such as "What is their reputation with the lending institutions?" and "Do they understand the banking and lending industry well?"

For a free copy of the booklet What is a mortgage consultant?," call 383-2212 or write: Premiere Funding, Inc., 714 Jerusalem road, Cohasset, MA 02025.

Music Circus wraps up July

South Shore Music Circus in Cohasset rounds out the month of July with a one night concert on July 31 by Frankie Valli and The Four Seasons plus Three Dog Night before kicking off the month of August with appearances by Clarence Clemons and Southside Johnny, Howie Mandel, Jerry Vale and Anna Maria Alberghetti.

Clarence Clemons, the high performance engine that drove the Boss' "E Street Band," will appear at the Music Circus with The Red Bank Rockers on Wednesday, Aug. 1, at 8 p.m. In 1989, Clemons was part of the much-heralded Ringo Starr "All Starrs of Rock" tour. He also enjoyed a Top 20 hit with his Jackson Browne duet, "You're A Friend of Mine."

Comedian Howie Mandel, known for six years as Dr. Wayne Fiscus on the highly-acclaimed NBC series "St. Elsewhere," returns to the South Shore Music Circus for his third visit on Thursday, Aug. 2 at 8 p.m.

The master of the lightning comeback, Mandel got his first taste of the road several years ago as Diana Ross' opening act on tour. Today, he plays to sold-out houses across the country and throughout Canada with his outrageous, irreverent sense of humor.

Jerry Vale and special guest Anna Maria Alberghetti will present a musical evening of romance on Friday, Aug. 3, at 8 p.m.

For further information, or to charge tickets by telephone, patrons should call the Music Circus at 383-1400.

Candidates' Night set

A Candidates Night is being jointly planned for 7:30 p.m. Sept. 6 by The South Shore Coalition and South Shore Chamber of Commerce at the Norwell High School Auditorium. The League of Women Voters will moderate.

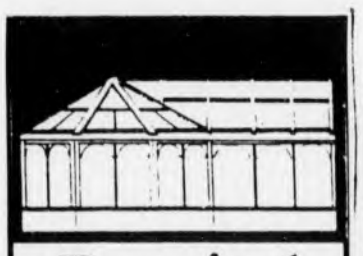
Coalition President Rebecca Freed indicated the date was "timely" and "right" because of its proximity to the primary. She urged Coalition members to tell their townspeople of the event so that candidates "know the South Shore has issues that need to be addressed."

Each candidate will have eight minutes of opening remarks, with Freed moderating the remaining time period.

Nearly half the candidates have already responded affirmatively to their invitation, while others are delaying commitment until closer to the date.

Selectman Charles Allen of Hull suggested inviting TV cameras to help curtail the wait and see posture of some candidates. He felt that media's presence might serve as a lure which few candidates could resist.

Freed said most candidates visit individual South Shore towns before the primary, but their focus was on convention delegates, and not "at-large voters."



"This night will allow townspeople to be active participants," she said.

A 'Drunkard' and dinner

Hingham Civic Music Theater is offering "The Drunkard" Friday and Saturday, Aug. 3 and 4, at South Shore Country Club.

The performance which is a musical comedy/melodrama with audience participation will be a dinner theater.

Historical Society plans Boston boat tour

The Cohasset Historical Society now is accepting advance reservations for its forthcoming special charter boat tour which will view three of Boston Harbor's best known lighthouses. Date of the tour is Sunday, Aug. 19. The Society has chartered the well-known Boston vessel "Gracious Lady" to view Boston Light, Graves Light and Minot's Ledge Lighthouse. On that day "Gracious Lady" will depart the boat dock at the former Hingham Shipyard at noon and will return there by, about 3 p.m. Reservations are limited to 150 persons and must be made in advance. Cost of reservations is $25 for members of the Historical Society, $30 for non-members. Reservations, with check accompanying, may be made by mail to the Cohasset Historical Society, 14 Summer Street, Cohasset MA 02025.

Of the three historic lighthouses marking the approach to Boston Harbor, Boston Light, on Little Brewster Island, is the nation's oldest lighthouse structure. The first Boston Light dated from 1716 and was constructed by Massachusetts Bay Colony at the request of Boston's merchants. That first lighthouse was blown up by departing British soldiers when they abandoned the city in 1776. The present lighthouse was soon erected by the State, and was one of the several lighthouses ceded by Massachusetts to the newly formed U.S. Lighthouse Establishment in 1791. In subsequent years the height of its powerful lantern was raised. Boston Light is one of the last U.S. lighthouses to be automated; keepers having resided on the island until very recently. Today, Boston Light remains a major navigational mark whose beacon is familiar to seafarers entering the port of Boston. Second of the major lighthouses marking the approaches to Boston is one of the most recent Massachusetts lighthouse, the famous stone tower at Graves Ledge. Completed in the summer of 1905 the granite tower marks a dangerous ledge off the peninsular of Winthrop. Graves Ledge, named for Vice Admiral Thomas Graves, a member of Gov. John Winthrop's fleet, has been the scene of numerous shipwrecks, including a modern one, the freighter "City of Salisbury" in the latter 1930's. In that well documented wreck the vessel's cargo included a shipment of zoo animals. Following the break-up of "City of Salisbury's" hull the animals were observed swimming in the waters of Boston Harbor by surprised local fishermen. Graves Light originally was a first-order lighthouse and was New England's most powerful beacon. The stone tower is unique in containing the Keeper's House within its structure. Its first-order Fresnel Lense was of French origin. The lowest course of stone blocks at Graves is but four feet above the low tide line on the ledge itself. Today Graves shows a powerful beacon easily visible from coastal sites around the perimeter of Boston Bay. Third of the historical lighthouses to be viewed on the forthcoming Historical Society charter tour is Minot's Ledge, off the Cohasset and Scituate shore. Recently the subject of a needed and extensive renovation to the upper parts of its structure, this famous ocean lighthouse dates from 1860. Its 114' tower of Quincy granite replaces a 70' tall iron lighthouse built in 1849-50 at the ledge. That first Minot's fell into the sea on the night of April 16-17, 1851 and its two Assistant Keepers, Joseph Antoine and Joseph Wilson, perished in its collapse during a fierce ocean storm. The granite light at Outer Minot's Ledge has withstood ocean gales and crashing waves for 130 years, and still beams its well known signal 1-4-3 to warn seafarers away from dreaded ledges. Automated in 1947, Minot's has been considered one of the most dangerous of American lighthouses to enter or leave. The 114 foot high spire of the famous offshore lighthouse often has been overtopped by giant waves during New England's winter "northeasters." Today, Minot's is a solar powered beacon and is a national Civil Engineering landmark.

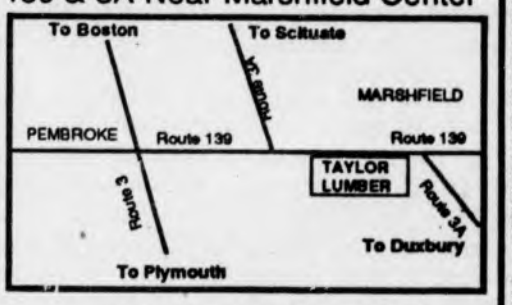
Additionally, the Historical Society's August 19 boat trip will provide an opportunity to view the coastline of the South Shore from the sea; Cohasset's famous Jerusalem Road will be featured. The special charter tour aboard "Gracious Lady" promises to be a high point in the Cohasset Historical Society's active summer season. For additional information please contact the Society at 383-6930.

Cohasset walking tour planned

This Sunday, July 29 will see the Cohasset Historical Society hold a historical walking tour of the town's renowned Town Common and center village. The tour will meet at 2 p.m. on the Common, near the colonial meeting house. The history and architecture of the Common's environs will be the subject of the tour.

Cohasset's original town Common is the remaining part of the once more extensive Undivided Common Land of the town, dating from the early 1600's. Its development traces three and a half centuries of the town's history. Homes and public buildings around the common represent several eras of history and architecture, ranging from Georgian and Federal to Greek Revival and Italianate periods. The colonial Precinct and Parish Meetinghouse will be viewed, and the historical significance of that unique building described.

Early homes of Sea Captains and merchants ring the Common, the first dating from 1713. 18th and 19th century houses abound along the ancient ways that define the space of the common, along with a typical 19th century New England Town Hall, an early 19th century Parish Church and another church built in the Gothic Revival style in the first years of the 20th century. These and other features of Cohasset's Common will be examined during the Society's walking tour. From the Common the tour will progress to the nearby center village where early houses can be seen; the oldest a 1704 former farmhouse now a village inn.



The center village sees 18th and 20th century buildings in close juxtaposition, reflecting the evolution of this small seaside community. The Historical Society's tour ends at its museum buildings on Elm Street, the Capt. John Wilson Historical House and Maritime Museum. Light refreshments will be served following the tour. Admission to the Society's walking tour is free, as will be admission to the museums at the end of the tour. Tour guide will be the Society's Senior Curator David Wadsworth.

Crafts and MacQuarrie face regional soccer challenge

Jonathan Crafts and Brett MacQuarrie, both Cohasset 12 year-olds, have been playing soccer this spring for South Shore United in the Premier National Challenge Cup League. Following an eight-game season where they played other premier teams from around the state, the South Shore United (boys under 12) won the Tournament of State Champions held at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst on June 9 and 10.

Team Coach Jerry Urquhart and Assistant Coach George Karalexis concur, "They played a wonderful team-oriented style of soccer, allowing only one goal and scoring 12 goals for the tournament, overpowering Inter County Soccer club 4-0 in the final. Both squads are located south of Boston, which demonstrates the great caliber of soccer being played on the South Shore."

MacQuarrie, a fullback, and Crafts, forward, along with their teammates from Duxbury, Marshfield, Hingham, Weymouth, and Holbrook, will be heading to Niagra Falls, New York, on June 29 to represent Massachusetts at the Region I tournament.

The Mass. Youth Soccer Association formed the National Challenge Cup League with the objective of providing the highest level of youth soccer competition in Massachusetts. This enhances the game of soccer overall, improves the state's most talented players, and encourages all players to reach their full potential and be fully competitive with other regions in the United States.

Maria Cahill interns for state

Maria Cahill of Cohasset, a family and community services major at the University of Massachusetts, is working as an intern at the state Office of Handicapped Affairs in Boston this summer.

Cahill, daughter of Maria and James E. Cahill of Buttonwood Lane, is earning academic credit for the summer through the University Internship Program. Created in 1972, the program allows students in all majors to apply what they learn in class to work in a professional setting. Interns work under the supervision of the employer, an academic advisor and an internship advisor.

Cahill is working in the client services program helping disabled individuals obtain benefits and services like social security, vocational rehabilitation services, housing and employment. She is also working on a follow up project.

Ellen Wolf, director of the University Internship Program, says that of the more than 6,000 students who have held internships, 80 percent have worked in Massachusetts. "Their work in state agencies, public service organizations and private industry makes a significant contribution to the state's economy," says Wolf.

Cahill is a senior at the University and a 1987 graduate of Cohasset High School.

Local teen to visit USSR

Under the auspices of the first AFS (American Field Service) year-long homestay program with the Soviet Union, local teenager Melissa Christoffel leaves this week for the Ukraine. With orientation stops in New York and Moscow, the 16-year old high school senior is heading for Donetsk, Ukraine, where she will live with a family and attend a local high school. She will spend a few days with her host family, before heading to Leningrad, Russia, on a trip with her Ukrainian school. About the same time, Melissa's AFS 'sister', Lesya, will head to this part of the world, where she will spend the year with a family in North Carolina.

Local members of AFS, are seeking several Cohasset families to temporarily host several Scandinavian exchange students for whom the national AFS office is seeking homes for the 1990-1991 school year. "Normally, all students have a United States family assigned to them before they leave their home countries, but this year, the number of host families is down nationally, and particularly in Massachusetts. So we find ourselves in a position of seeking homes for a period of time that may vary from one week to two months," explains Judy Dwyer, local AFS spokesperson. "We don't like to work this way, but AFS has committed to these students and we don't want to go back on our word."

Cohasset residents hosted 18 Norwegian students two weeks ago for a long weekend and each reports a very positive experience. These particular students were on their way back home after spending a year here and every one of them talked about how great their year-long experience in the US had been.

AFS is a program begun after the second World War. Singled out recently by the United Nations, the group was recognized for its leadership in promoting peace and understanding between peoples of the world. AFS also was listed number six among all American charities in terms of ratio of money spent on the program versus administrative costs, in a recent study by a national magazine.

Bartow earns dean's list

Felicia Bartow, a graduate of Cohasset High School and daughter of Karin and Stephen Bartow, 48 Sohier St., has been named to the dean's list of Macalester College for academic achievement during the spring semester of the 1989-1990 school year.

Macalester College is a highly selective liberal arts college affiliated with the Presbyterian Church. The college is known for its diverse student body, use of metropolitan area resources, extensive international programs, and tradition of community involvement and service. Located midway between the downtowns of St. Paul and Minneapolis, the campus boasts some of the best fine arts and science facilities among the nation's small colleges.

Two grads from Skidmore

Two Cohasset residents recently graduated from Skidmore College in Saratoga Springs, N.Y.

Cynthia Conklin of 40 Jerusalem Road Drive earned a bachelor of arts in psychology and art.

Sara Rutherford Tague of 101 Atlantic Ave. earned a bachelor of arts in psychology.

CHS students praised

The Executive Officers and the Board of Directors of the Massachusetts Foreign Language Association extend sincere congratulations to Suzzunne DeCruz, Melissa Christoffel, Juliana Chittick, and Brooke Anderson, students at Cohasset High School, recipients of the MaFLA Award for the academic year.

The award is granted for academic excellence and leadership.

Moyers receives degree

Kendra Moyer, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. John D. Moyer, of Cohasset, received her bachelor of arts degree from Sarah Lawrence College in Bronxville, N.Y., on May 25.

Wentworth students lauded

Two Cohasset students were among the 603 Wentworth graduates receiving degrees last month.

Sasha Bubanja of 44 Hillside Drive and Rick Ainslie of 400 Beechwood St. both earned as associates degrees in building construction technology.

He 'draws' on local issues for his cartoons

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

At first glance he seems rather sedate. Then you see the impish gleam in the eyes that must have made his reputation in the fourth grade.

Meet Jim Hamilton, cartoonist extraordinaire.

Hamilton has been drawing cartoons from the time he figured out how to bend his wrist and hold a crayon. He used to entertain his buddies with them in grade school and by high school he was drawing a strip for the school newspaper

That was long ago – he just celebrated his twenty-fifth college reunion – but he's been involved in print and graphic work one way or another ever since.

Hamilton's cartoons have been appearing in the Cohasset Mariner since January. They got here through a rather circuitous route.

Hamilton has always designed his own Christmas cards. As you might guess from his work in the Mariner, if there are visions of sugarplums dancing in his head, they dance to the tune of a different drummer. His most recent Christmas effort featured the recycling-transfer facility. It also found its way into the hands of Sharon Becker.

Becker shared it with Alix White, who writes the recycling column for the newspaper. White asked to use the card to illustrate her column – and the rest is, as they say, history. Hamilton's work has been gracing the pages of the Mariner ever since.

He considers the cartoons his way of sending a letter to the editor – lucky for us and our readers that he is such a faithful and prolific correspondent. They also serve as his way of getting involved in his town government.

"I've worked on town committees before, but find that just as my fellow committee members are getting energized, I'm already past my bedtime and have to apply all my mental skills toward keeping awake," Hamilton said.

"Maybe editorial page illustrations will get more people to read about what's going on with town

Friends Kyralea Cogill and Natalie Thompson share a summer smile.

State budget leaves town still guessing

With no firm figures to go by, town officials aren't sure how the new state budget for the current fiscal year will affect Cohasset. But they are sure it isn't good news. The state still owes the town $50,000 from fiscal year 1990.

"I was very upset to see the figure $85 million cut out of town aid," selectman Diana Kornet said. If the cutback is shared equally by the cities and towns in the commonwealth, Cohasset could lose as much as $56,000 from an already-tight budget, according to advisory committee chairman Ray Kasperowicz.

Cohasset included $1.469 million in local aid in this year's budget, estimating that the town would receive no more and no less than last year.

"I think the town should be able to find a way to take it in stride," Kasperowicz said. "We do have free cash and there's a possibility our local receipts could be higher than estimated."

Kasperowicz was hopeful the increased receipts would offset the local aid reduction.

Executive Secretary Greg Doyon was less sanguine.

Doyon said the budget is exceptionally tight as a result of cuts made after the Proposition 2 1/2 override for operating costs was defeated.

"If the total receipts from all sources don't offset the local aid cut, we may have to have a special town meeting in the fall," Doyon said. A special town meeting is necessary in order to spend free cash from prior years.

Kasperowicz said the Town Government Structure committee is working on a variety of cost-cutting measures. The committee is studying the feasibility of using a private ambulance service.

"We're looking for ways to save some money. There may be $100,000 to $150,000 in savings a year." Then he added, "But that's just numbers, not what the service would be like and if people want it."

None of these projections include considerations of what will happen when new town and school employee contracts are set, or the impact if the Citizens for Limited Taxation petition passes.

"We cannot afford large contract settlements over

Selectmen grille Old Colony proponents

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

When selectmen quizzed representatives from the Old Colony railroad restoration project recently, the toughest questions had to do with financing. Although they are favorably disposed to the idea of mass transit, the selectmen wanted guarantees about financing and future town assessments.

Railroad consultant Barry Faulkner of Cambridge Systematics tried to reassure the board by telling them the federal government is a co-signatory to the Environmental Impact study. Although there will be no absolute commitment on the part of the government until the final EIS is completed, Faulkner said the federal commitment to the project is strong.

The selectmen also asked about the town's share of the sticker price. Currently Cohasset is assessed $138,000 by the transit system. The bulk of that is rebated to the town because it receives no direct transit services. According to State Representative Mary Jeanette Murray (R-Cohasset), if the town gets improved service through the commuter rail the rebate will be lost.

The MBTA did not address the rebated assessment directly, but said the addition of a station or rehabilitated rail line in Cohasset would not directly increase the town's assessment. According to the MBTA's written response to Cohasset's draft Position Statement, the state passed special legislation almost 20 years ago prohibiting inclusion of new rail stations in the formula "which allocates some of the costs by where the service is located."

As a result, Faulkner said, the new services would have a negligible effect on Cohasset.

The MBTA also defended their projections of the state economy and the continued ability of the state to pick up their share of the costs.

Faulkner explained that project consultants forecasted a modest growth in the economy of three percent over the rate of inflation over the next 20 years. This rate, he said, is considerably less that the rate of growth during the 1980s and is comparable to national trends.

"If we don't meet the forecast," Faulkner said, "we will have a lot worse things to worry about than whether the state can meet the T expenses."

The selectmen asked the MBTA to respond to a Wall Street Journal article based on a federal study of cost overruns in mass transit projects around the country. Selectman Ned Tebbetts was particularly concerned that costs were seriously underestimated on the Old Colony project.

Faulkner said the Old Colony project differs greatly from the projects singled out in the study. The cost estimates for this project, he said, have been based upon an engineering analysis to a significant level of design detail and an amount for inflation is factored in.

Land-taking costs will be negotiated individually. Any overruns in the budget for overall land taking will be absorbed by a contingency fund.

Although selectmen would like to see riders pay more than 30 percent of the operating costs, Faulkner said fares are pegged to the distance traveled and must be consistent with the rest of the commuter rail system. He also said additional fare revenue will account for more than half of the increase in system operating costs due to Old Colony service.

Faulkner told the selectmen that setting fares is a complicated process. In addition to financial impact, the T must consider the impact on ridership, economic equity, development and air quality when setting fares.

Tebbetts contended that the rider share is only a target. He said the actual performance in 1989 was only 23 percent of the operating expenses.

That figure surprised the representatives from the MBTA who thought the figure was between 27 and 28 percent.

Tebbetts also raised questions about the T's operating deficit, currently pegged at $513 million. The state picks up 70 to 75 percent of the shortfall. Tebbetts asked how the system could continue to operate given such large deficits and the effect of Proposition 2 1/2.

"The state may balk at picking up 75 percent of the deficit," Tebbetts said. He told the representa-

Cohasset's week

Voter registration sessions

If you plan to vote in the state primary elections scheduled for Sept. 18, be sure you are registered to vote in the party of your choice.

The Registrars have scheduled two special registration sessions for the convenience of Cohasset residents:

Saturday, Aug. 18 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.
Tuesday, Aug. 21 8:30 a.m. to 10 p.m.

Both sessions will be held in the Town Clerk's office. Residents may register to vote or change their party affiliation at that time.

August 21 is the last day to register to vote in the primary election.

If you are disabled and cannot come town hall to register or if you have questions about your voter status, call the Registrars at 383-9900, extension 106.

Treasurer's hours change

Residents who want to do business with the treasurer-collector's office need to get there before 4:30 p.m. on Tuesdays or after 8:30 a.m. Thursday from now on.

Beginning Aug. 1, the office will be closed to public transactions both at the window and by phone on Wednesdays. The change was made to give the office staff uninterrupted time to process paperwork.

"Due to budget cutbacks and state-mandated increases in paperwork, we find we need a full day each week of uninterrupted time in order to keep our work up to date," Treasurer-collector Elizabeth Ripley said. Telephone calls pertaining to treasurer-collector matters will not be transferred to other departments.

Taxes may be mailed to the treasurer's office at P.O. Box 296, Cohasset, MA 02025 at any time. The office will also reopen Wednesday during the week that real estate taxes are due.

"We are asking for your understanding and indulgence while we institute this change," Ripley said.

The downturn in employment is affecting the town of Cohasset.

The town's unadjusted unemployment rate for the month of May was 5.5 percent, according to a spokesman for the Division of Employment Security.

The May figures are the most recent available for the town. Only a year before (May, 1989) the unemployment rate was 2.9 percent.

Nationally the unemployment rate was 5.2 percent for last month, which is slightly less than the state unemployment rate of 5.8 percent.

A year ago the state rate was 3.3 percent. The state rate has been steadily climbing since May, 1988, when it dipped to 2.7 percent.

Banks plan sale of branch

The Cooperative Bank of Concord's branch in Cohasset, housed in the newly-renovated Tedeschi Plaza on Route 3A, wants to fold up shop by the end of the year.

If the bank secures regulatory approval, South Shore Bank of Quincy will purchase the deposits and loans held by the Cooperative Bank. The Cooperative Bank's $15 million in deposits will nearly double the deposits held by South Shore Bank.

The Cooperative, formerly known as Quincy Cooperative, would close the branch office and all business would be absorbed into the South Shore branch housed at the Plaza as well.

According to David Bradbury, chairman of the Cooperative Bank of Concord, the sale makes economic sense for both banks.

Bradbury said the bank needed to expand in order to keep the Cooperative branch profitable. When they weren't able to find an acceptable way to enlarge the branch, they entered negotiations with South Shore Bank.

Cooperative customers shouldn't experience any difficulties in the takeover.

"We've been involved in a number of similar transactions," Bradbury said. "The transition is smooth and effortless."

Town duplex decision due

The fate of the town-owned duplex on Government Island may be on the agenda when selectmen meet again Aug. 6. The duplex needs extensive repairs, including the septic system.

Previously selectmen discussed using the building for other town purposes or selling it. In addition to the costly repairs facing the town, one tenant is considerably in arrears on the rent.

The Government Island duplex subcommittee, consisting of selectman Diana Kornet and selectmen Chairman Rocco Laugelle, met July 30 to discuss the issues and come up with a recommendation for the full board.

"We came to a consensus, but I'm not going to share that until it's been discussed by the full board because it's so sensitive," Kornet said.

Puppeteers Alison Hawks, 9, of Cohasset, and Jennifer Sansonetti, 8, of Scituate, and narrator Jamie Diorio, 7, of Hingham, prepare a shadow puppet show during Derby Academy's summer Arts Day.

management and get them more interested in helping control the events of the town," he added.

The ideas that shape Hamilton's cartoons come from any number of sources. He reads the paper, watches the selectmen via cable and chats with the neighbors. Sometimes the topics are the big, important things that affect the town; and sometimes they are the little foibles and foolishness that give the town its character. Or characters.

Everybody seems to have their favorite Hamilton cartoon – and probably a few have cartoons they wish had never seen the light of day. Hamilton thinks those folks may be taking themselves, and things in general, too seriously.

"Nobody has called me threatening bodily harm," he joked, "but I am surprised at folks who take a cartoon literally.

"A cartoon is supposed to make a statement using the least amount of detail and copy which will attract a reader's attention," he explained. "Never mind if it's an overstatement or so subtle that most people miss the message as long as it produces some kind of response, it's done the job."

Hamilton's cartoons work because he knows his town so well, even if he can't lay claim to being a townie. Although he can't say he is a third generation Cohassetite, at least he can say he's entered his third decade.

Hamilton's arrival in town was precipitated by a surfeit of snow and a dearth of the milk of human kindness.

He and his wife were living in Cambridge in the late '60s. One year a series of heavy spring snow storms hit the city. Since there was no place to park his car except the street – where parking was prohibited during snow emergencies – his car was towed to the Cambridge city dump.

"I had to go by cab to collect it, kind of like bailing a relative out of jail," he recollected. "Not only did I have to pay a towing fee and fine, but my emergency light and snow shovel were stolen from the car.

Sometimes an idea for a cartoon comes to mind while driving around in traffic..

"I said to Laurie, 'O.K., that's it for city living, let's go find a place in the country.' "

The Hamiltons kind of fancied living in an antique Cape. They tied up with a broker who was the friend of a friend, and off they went looking at homes on the South Shore.

"We first saw our future house blanketed under snow on a beautiful day, and it was love at first sight," Hamilton said.

The would-be seller had really set the stage to hook a romantic. There were fires blazing in the fireplaces and the owner's child was decked out in Colonial garb. Hamilton and his wife fell hook, line and sinker.

"We made an offer on the house and only after the snow melted found that it was in the town of Cohasset and needed a lot of work."

The house sits on a hill in the middle of the farm country of Cohasset. Hamilton loves the ambience of King Street. There's a horse corral behind the house and a garden with corn and tomatoes and crafty raccoons.

One of his favorite parts of life in a small town was the weekly trip to the dump. He'd show up with his one barrelfull and meet up with his neighbors.

"Cohasset used to have one of the most impressive landfills in the South Shore, a really great place to swap ideas, run for political office, raise money and talk shop with folks you'd never see otherwise," Hamilton said.

He also used to come home with perfectly good treasures until his wife broke him of his trash-picking tendencies.

"There comes a point in mid-life where you have to take more to the dump than you bring home," Hamilton philosophized.

Although he misses the dump that was, he's getting used to the new ways. He thinks the RTF – everybody's affectionate appellation for the recycling transfer facility – has the potential to rank right up there with the best in the country "as long as they let us slow down long enough to get to know and enjoy the place better."

The RTF has been a favorite cartoon topic. He's also delved into the cemetery problem, the Lily Pond landtaking and the mysteries of town meeting. Oh yes, the selectmen are regular cartoon fodder.

"I can't quite get Martha's caricature, but she's been a good sport about past attempts," Hamilton said about his efforts to capture selectman Martha Gjesteby in ink. Former selectman Burt Pratt was also a favorite target.

"I'm sorry that Burt is off the board – he was a cartoonist's delight with his deadpan delivery and that great sense of self-importance," he said.

One of Hamilton's fans is Joe Laugelle, who so far seems to have escaped the cartoonist's pen.

"That's probably because he's harder to draw than Rocco and Pete," Hamilton explained. "If Joe would grow a beard, maybe all three Laugelles could get into the same cartoon."

Hamilton doesn't suffer from a lack of role models. If you ask who his favorite cartoonist is, he'll list just about every political cartoonist since Thomas Nast put pen to paper in the 1800's. Although he follows all the political cartoonists, such as Szep and Oliphant, he still has a soft spot in his heart for the strips he grew up reading in the old BostonHerald's funny papers.

Al Capp was one of his favorites. He liked Capp's sensuously drawn women and the offbeat characters in continuing political story lines. In his last years, Capp grew bitter and his politics were increasingly shrill and reactionary, but Hamilton remembers the glory years when Capp was the best.

Francis Dahl was another favorite. Dahl did a local strip in the Herald focusing on Boston and New England news items gleaned from the daily papers. Hamilton said Dahl's cartoons tended to feature birds, beasts, Bostonians and Vermont cows.

... or during a lull at an important business meeting.

There definitely is a morbid side to Hamilton – he's a real Charles Addams fan. Hamilton decorated his high school senior prom with cut outs of Addams' creepy mansions, monsters and madmen long before television tamed them and turned them into cute little parlor creatures. Today, Hamilton can be found turning the newspaper pages to find out how far Larson's bizarre twist of imagination has led him into the "Far Side."

the next couple years until we're out of this recession," Kasperowicz said.

If successful, the CLT petition would make dealing with the current round of local aid cuts seem like a day at the beach. The petition would roll back taxes, fees and fines to the level in effect on June 30, 1988.

State Revenue Commissioner Stephen Kidder estimated the state will lose nearly $1.2 billion in revenues from January to July, 1991 alone if the petition passes.

"I don't even want to think about it," school Supt. Stephen Hart said.

The school and town can't really begin to grapple with these issues until officials have some reliable numbers.

tives that Cohasset would need guarantees how much the assessment will be "somewhere down the line" before selectmen could sign off on the project.

Tebbetts' last major point involved federal government' commitment to the railroad restoration project.

"What assurance is there?" Tebbetts asked. "The federal government has no track record of commitment to rail transit."

According to Ernest Deeb of the MBTA, a draft grant application is ready for submission to secure Urban Mass Transit Authority funds covering 50 percent of the costs.

"We have received verbal assurance we can use other UMTA funds toward rehabilitation projects on other lines," Deeb said.

Resident David Manion, of 24 Lantern Lane, continued to question the commitment of UMTA to funding the rail restoration project when the state is also angling for federal money to build another tunnel and depress the Southeast artery.

Manion was told the tunnel and artery projects would not negatively impact the Old Colony project. Those projects are funded out of federal highway funds, not UMTA grants, according to Deeb.

"The MBTA is nationally recognized as a well-managed transit service," Faulkner said. Once the UMTA buys into a project they are as much a party as the MBTA is, he tried to assure them.

Manion was not impressed.

"I don't have any faith this project can get built under budget," Manion declared.

Ceremony caps hospital project

The final steel beam of South Shore Hospital's $15.9 million emergency/obstetric enhancement project was lowered into place during recent topping-off ceremonies held at the hospital.

The project, which includes 47,500 square feet of new construction and 18,000 square feet of renovation, will replace and more than double the size of the hospital's existing emergency department, and create new space for obstetric services, including a Level II nursery for the care of newborns with special medical problems.

"We're pleased to note that, with the final steel beam in place, the new emergency and obstetric wing is on schedule," said David Jones of Weymouth, who hosted the topping-off as chairman of the hospital's building committee. Jones said the project is moving smoothly largely due to the team efforts of the project's designer, the Ritchie Organization, and the project's general contractor, the Perini Corporation. The project is scheduled for completion in late 1991.

Jones announced that the living evergreen tree attached to the steel beam during the ceremony will be planted in memory of David B. Perini, Jr., son of the chairman and president of the Perini Corporation, who recently lost his courageous struggle with cancer.

South Shore Hospital's new emergency department will have 32 treatment areas, a new fully equipped trauma room and an x-ray room. It will have two entrances: one for ambulance traffic and one for walk-in patients and visitors. In addition, a new "fast track" system will ensure that patients with urgent but non-life-threatening illnesses or injuries are treated quickly.

"We on the South Shore have needed a larger emergency department to handle the high volume of trauma and other emergencies that occur daily," said Jane Philips of Abington, a member of the hospital's building committee. "Now we're getting that emergency room, as well as a larger obstetric unit to handle the growing number of births on the South Shore." It is expected that by 1992, more than 2500 babies will be born at the hospital.

The project includes a 32-bed obstetric unit with nine new labor/delivery/recovery rooms, as well as a Level II nursery, which will provide care to premature infants and those with special medical problems at birth. The hospital has hired a board-certified neonatologist to provide expert care for newborns.

"The new obstetric unit will give South Shore families more birthing options close to home," added Philips.

Members of the South Shore Hospital's building committee pose next to the final steel beam of the hospital's emergency/obstetric enhancement project. Dante Cannarozzi, MD, of Cohasset, chief of pathology, stands second from the left. The $15.9 million project is scheduled for completion in late 1991.

FOR AN IDEA OF HOW DIRTY YOUR ORIENTAL RUG IS, RUB THIS AND LOOK AT YOUR FINGER.

Oriental rugs are constantly picking up various types of soil. Some are greasy and some are gritty. But they all can eat away at your treasured possession.
For your Oriental rug to retain its beauty and value, it should be cleaned at least once every three to five years.
At Grillo Oriental Rug Cleaning, we carefully examine each rug, then give it the most suitable treatment. Sometimes that means gentle machine-washing, other times it means our 'Art-Safe' hand-washing. And our exclusive equipment and methodology enable us to remove the deep-set grit that others miss.
Furthermore, unlike harsh commercial cleaning, our individualized, museum-quality care is always safe, always effective.
For more information, or to have your rug picked up, call (617) 871-6500. Outside this area code, call 1-800-649-7707.

Chiropractic for Health

Chiropractors

CONSERVATIVE VS. RADICAL THERAPY

The medical community has been coming to the realization that back surgery is the option of last resort. A study done by researchers at the University of Texas Health Science Center points out this trend. Researchers there compared back-pain sufferers who took part in conventional pain-control clinic programs with another group given a form of intensive outpatient rehabilitation. This latter group of back-pain sufferers was told to perform specific exercises, and received other forms of back-care information and education. At the end of a two-year period, records show that 87 percent of those receiving out-patient rehabilitation were back to work. Only 41 percent of those treated by conventional methods were working. The patients treated conventionally were twice as likely to have had surgery as those rehabilitated on an outpatient basis.

Back difficulty is a painful condition. In many instances people needlessly endure the resulting pain and discomfort. DR. DEBRA M. TRANBERG, SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, 80 Front St., Scituate, 545-7388, and DR. SUSAN EMMER, CHIROPRACTIC & FAMILY WELLNESS CARE, 87 Sohier St., Cohasset, 383-1330, provide the chiropractic applications that effectively address the source of many of these problems. For pain relief as well as preventive measures, we invite you to call today. Let us help you return to a total state of well-being. By appointment. Workers Comp. cases and most insurance plans accepted.

P.S. Chiropractic does not promote surgery as an option, making chiropractic the avenue which should be initially explored.

Around town

❑Lauren Wood competed in her last skating competition last week (last as a high school skater that is, she is headed for UNH in August where she will of course continue her quest for the golds). Lauren did a grand job, winning a gold medal in figures, a gold medal in footwork, a gold medal in couples, and a bronze in freestyle. Lauren certainly must be proud of her six year career, and we are sure the Pilgrim ISIa Competition will miss her. Hopefully she will keep us informed of her winnings at UNH!!!

❑Speaking of next year and education, imagine the learning that Melissa Christoffel will be getting in her year as a student at the Soviet Union! Melissa was one of 50 students chosen nationally to live there for a year, the first time that the Soviets have allowed students to stay for a year. She left last week, armed with all sorts of things to trade and barter with. Although many will miss her cheerful, smiling face, we know that she will have a fantastic year and hope that she will write a letter now and then telling of her experiences.

❑Good news for all of you soccer players, the Cohasset Recreation Department soccer camp still has room for more signups! There are 75 boys already signed up for the week of the 6th, and 40 girls for the week of the 13th. It is a full day program, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. and the cost is $139 per camper. Contact either the Recreation Department or Larry Shultz for further details!!

❑Hats off to Jane Goedecke, who gave some of her campaign monies to the town for a nice brick walk at the new town hall. It will save the lawn, and it will allow all to think of her generosity as they walk on the brick path.

Katie Bursk sports her funky deadhead shirt.

❑Congratulations to Daniel J. Kierce who was inducted into the Delta Mu Delta Honor Society at the recent Nichols College honor society banquet. Daniel is a CHS grad, and son of Mr. and Mrs. Christopher Kierce of 189 South Main Street.

❑The guidance office has a new secretary to replace Mary Brennock (who retires at the end of this month). Her name is Maureen Sullivan. We wish you well, Maureen, and we surely wish Mary a happy retirement.

❑Auditions for the fall production of the Hingham Civic Music Theater are scheduled for August 13 and 14 at the Hingham High School. The fall production sounds like a lot of fun; it will be the "Wizard of Oz." Come on, all of you talented people. Get out there and perform!

❑Leo Fiori is so proud of his Red Sox...the Little League team that he was the sponsor for this past season! They won again this year!! Now, if Leo's Boston Red Sox will only follow suit, maybe he can start his own farm league, with pitchers as a top priority!!

❑The CHS Field Hockey team is doing lots to ensure itself a winning season! The captains are planning practices on Aug. 13 from 8-10 a.m. at the high school front field. All of that to get into shape for the double sessions, which will begin on Aug. 27. So, all of you field hockey players, here is your chance to get into shape, every day during the dates given. Here's to a winning season.

❑Congratulations go to John Joseph Froio who received a bachelor of science degree at Wake Forest University. Good luck to you in the business world, John!

❑We hear that Grace Silvia attained her best bowling average ever this past season! Congratulations, Grace, here's hoping that you will do even better when bowling gets underway again!!

❑Everyone is looking forward to the opening of the Chart House, the site is wonderful and the view grand. Here's to the food being the same....

❑Aloha to my sister Ricki, and a big thank you from all of her friends and relatives whose life she brightened in her all too brief stay in our town. Come back real soon!! We love you.

❑We understand that Inspirations Boutique held a very successful fashion show at P.J.'s in Scituate last week!

❑That's all of the news for this week, please call me with any newsworthy item that you might have. Make your news everyone's news!

❑Tara Gallagher and Carrie Ripley qualified to compete in the BayState Game Finals held at MIT in Cambridge on Saturday, July 20. Ripley and Gallagher were representing the Cohasset Community Center with Coach Ruthann Sargent. Congratulations girls.

Crayola is coloring the world with 'hot' new colors

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

The world changed about a month ago. If you missed it, it must be that you haven't bought that big box of crayons as part of the annual back-to-school shopping spree yet.

Crayola Crayons, the great-granddaddy of children's creativity, changed that old box of 64.

Now when your children color their world, they can't do it up in raw umber, maize and violet blue any more.

Those are just three of the colors you'll find missing if you crack open one of the new boxes made by the Binney & Smith Company of Easton, Pa.

The box of 64 crayons has been updated to reflect the palette of the '90s.

According to Lina Striglia, Binney & Smith's media communication specialist, the company came to its decision after conducting some market research with their primary consumers — kids.

"We asked children what we could do to bring crayons into the '90s," Striglia Said.

"They told us to make them brighter, that the colors were dull and boring."

The market research people brought the bad news back to the art and technical design people.

They spread out all 72 colors manufactured by the company rainbow fashion to see what was missing from the spectrum.

"They saw a lot of areas where they could take out a crayon color without losing anything," Striglia said.

As an example, she pointed out that maize, sometimes referred to as a dull, flat yellow, is similar to golden rod.

By eliminating maize, room was created for a new color.

In an 18-month-long process and 200 Binney & Smith employees from market research, art and technical design and research and development, the Crayola color experts eliminated eight of the near-duplicates and replaced them with brand spanking-new colors.

It wasn't a process they took lightly.

They needed to be sure they weren't trailing a neon fad that would disappear and be replaced by pastels next year.

Their experts say say when you check out the new boxes, you will find the colors that will lead us into the 21st century

"We follow the color trends carefully," Striglia explained. "This is a real reflection of today's children's lifestyles."

They also expect the changes will protect their share of the crayon market. Since two billion crayons roll out of the Crayola company each year, it's a market well worth protecting.

Among the missing colors are maize, raw umber, lemon yellow, blue gray, violet blue, orange red, orange yellow and green blue.

They are making way for the hot new colors — dandelion, wild strawberry, vivid tangerine, fuschia, teal blue, royal purple, jungle green and cerulean.

There's no overlap, no close competitors in the box for these new colors on the block.

A toy truck takes away some of the old Crayola colors like maize and raw umber that were replaced with new "hot" colors such as Dandelion and Wild Strawberry.

"Each new color is distinctive," Striglia promised.

The company didn't have a lot of experience to draw on in making the changes.

In nearly 90 years of crayon making, they've never eliminated a color.

Only once have they added new colors to their crayon line.

In 1972 they began manufacturing fluorescent colors available in a separate box of eight or in a box of 72.

The only other major changes were changes of Hard times

Difficult times lie ahead for the cities and towns of the commonwealth.

Meeting necessary expenses just became more difficult with the state legislature opting to slash local aid payments by $85 million in the current fiscal year to balance the state's budget. The state still owes many communities for local aid payments due in fiscal year 1990.

But as they say, we ain't seen nothing yet.

Waiting in the wings is a ballot petition submitted by Citizens for Limited Taxation. If the petition passes, the state will be forced to roll back taxes, fees and fines to the June 30, 1988 level. State Revenue Commissioner Stephen Kidder estimates the state will lose nearly $1.2 billion in revenues from January to July, 1991 alone. The toll over the 18-month period spanning Jan. 1, 1991 to June 30, 1992 totals nearly $3.8 billion.

It doesn't take a world class intellect to figure out that local aid will take another hit.

While it is mighty enticing for any taxpayer struggling to balance a personal budget to want to get the state's paws out of his pockets, we also want all those goodies.

We don't want to give up excellence in education or long-term care for our elderly. No one wants the roads and bridges we drive on to crumble from neglect nor do we want our harbors and rivers to be giant cesspools.

It all takes money — and, unfortunately, the pie can't be cut that fine. Important decisions must be made about what we will pay for and what we will do without.

Some people are sure that getting rid of waste, duplication and mismanagement at the state level will off-set any lost revenues. Identifying the waste and finding the will to do something about will be a challenge.

This is one crisis that isn't going to go away just because the beach weather is fine and numbers are so boring.

Each person in Cohasset of voting age has an absolute responsibility to be informed and be registered to vote.

Being informed takes some commitment. It isn't enough to pick up the paper or turn on the television or radio. These are hard issues with no easy answers.

Voting is simple. Register at the town clerk's office — there are extended hours on August 18 and 21 for your convenience — and get in line on primary and election day.

And don't forget to help your home town make the hard choices ahead. Attend meetings, make your opinions known to your elected officials, write a letter to the editor.

It's time to get involved.

Jane Goedecke has proposed using some of her past campaign funds to pay for a sidewalk leading from the town hall parking lot to the existing walkway -- a shortcut that has been wearing a path into the carefully tended lawn.

Board should reject RTF regulations

[Editor's note: A copy of the following letter to the Board of Health was submitted to the Mariner for publication.]

I am writing to state my strong opposition to the proposed general landfill regulation which the Board of Health discussed at its meeting on July 17. I urge the Board to reject this proposed regulation.

The proposed regulation, which was tabled by the Board at the July 17 meeting pending review by Town Counsel, reads as follows:

"Anyone wishing to solicit at the recycling/transfer station must first obtain permission from the Board of Health. Such permission may be oral from the Health Agent. No more than two persons may solicit for one cause on the RTF at any one time. All solicitation will occur on the exit road approximately seventy-five (75) feet from the gate."

Since "solicit" is not defined, it must be interpreted broadly to include the distribution of political literature, the collection of signatures on nomination papers and petitions, the making of speeches, political candidates and proponents or opponents of causes meeting voters and shaking hands, and the holding of signs with political messages. These are all activities protected by the U.S. and Massachusetts constitutions, particularly on public property.

The Cedar Street landfill, now called the RTF, has for decades been the primary place in Cohasset for candidates and campaign workers to collect signatures, hand out literature, hold signs, and meet voters. Restricting the use of the RTF for political activity would reduce the ability of Cohasset residents to both campaign for office and to be involved in the political process, and would most likely conflict with Article 9.

Letters

This proposed regulation is an outrage and an affront to Constitutional liberties and to American ideals. If this regulation was adopted I am sure it would be easily overturned. The inevitable court suit against this regulation, which would be an open-and-shut case, would gain nothing for the town to compensate for the legal costs which it would incur. I urge the Board of Health to reject this regulation.

CHS' new philosophy is 'hilarious'

To the Editor,

Thank you for printing the new, updated version of Cohasset High Schools' "Philosophy," consisting of 12 General Goals and 19 Specific Objectives (July 26 edition). It was truly hilarious.

I laughed so hard that I fell out of my chair. I even think it was funnier than my four "Garfield" books, and two "Doonesbury" books.

My only regret is that CHS didn't have such philosophy when I was in high school. As a result, I am unable to communicate, I am incompetent, I have no values, I am not independent, and I am a physical, as well as mental, basketcase.

I am sure, however, that this list will improve things immensely.

Congratulations to all who help Cohasset children

It happens that there is an amazing number of organized summertime activities for children in this town.

The town has its fair share of fine private programs.

There are some wonderful people who provide private childcare. There are some fine programs available to those who can afford the transportation and other fees. But the real heroes are the people who make public programs work.

Obviously, the recreation department — its director and commissioners — deserves high praise for running a playground program that offers something less glitzy than private summer camp but something quite inexpensive and substantial.

The Cohasset Sailing Club has been doing their usual fine work overseeing a program of sailing instruction that even lets kids (and larger people) enjoy summer skills at a reasonable cost.

And the sports volunteers and parents who keep travelling baseball moving along should be commended.

The same goes for soccer supporters.

This is one community that manages to provide plenty of activity for the children. It takes the work and concern of thousands of us to pull it off. Everyone involved in caring for the children has earned the thanks of this community.

All the dirt on composting and recycling

By Mary Ford
Mariner staff

As early as September, the Paul Pratt Memorial Library will have a copy of the Solid Waste Management Resource Guide for Massachusetts Schools, an educational tool that is the baby of the Department of Environmental Protection.

The 275-page guide, printed on recycled paper, is being distributed to the public libraries in the 351 cities and towns in the Commonwealth.

Waste Management, Inc., a firm which provides commercial trash service from South Boston to Provincetown and west to Brockton, is awarding a $30,000 grant, over three years, to co-sponsor the guide in conjunction with the Massachusetts Audubon Society.

TEACHER-TRAINING WORKSHOPS

The grant will pay for additional copies of the Resource Guide and help pay for state-wide, teacher-training workshops, coordinated by the Audubon Society, to begin in the fall, says Linda Domizio, public information officer for the DEP.

The three-hour workshops, which are open to teachers, youth-group leaders, or any interested members of the community, will acquaint participants with the guide's format and content.

Susan Rauchwerk of Mass. Audubon will conduct a workshop on the Resource Guide from 4 p.m. to 7 p.m., October 3, at the Blue Hills Trailside Museum in Milton. The cost of the workshop is $15 which includes a copy of the guide. To register for the workshop please call the museum at 617-333-0690.

Domizio says the Resource Guide, geared for grades K through 12, provides "all the information in one place" that educators need to teach a wide range of lessons on everything from backyard composting to the consequences of 'plastics at sea,' to the costs of recycling.

One lesson, suitable for secondary school students, sets up a mock town meeting and deals with the repercussions created by the building of a combustion facility in the town.

The lessons in the guide may be adapted to any course from government to biology. It is not necessary for financially strapped schools to develop a separate course on solid waste management, she says.

'ALL IN ONE PLACE'

Domizio says the reason for developing the guide sprang from teachers' calls to the DEP complaining that they couldn't find information on solid waste management "all in one place."

"You have to be able to teach the whole ball of wax," says Domizio. "Discussion on recycling has to be backed up with the impact of ground water pollution for example."

And Domizio says targeting children was no accident.

"Children are our future. They need to know. Children are very inquisitive. They often are the people that are taking the garbage out.

"Hopefully, they will educate their parents," she says.

Domizio adds that a "huge" slice of the local tax dollar goes to trash. She notes that in many towns the cost is second only to running the schools.

The Resource Guide is not under copyright and may be reproduced and used for educational purposes, she says.

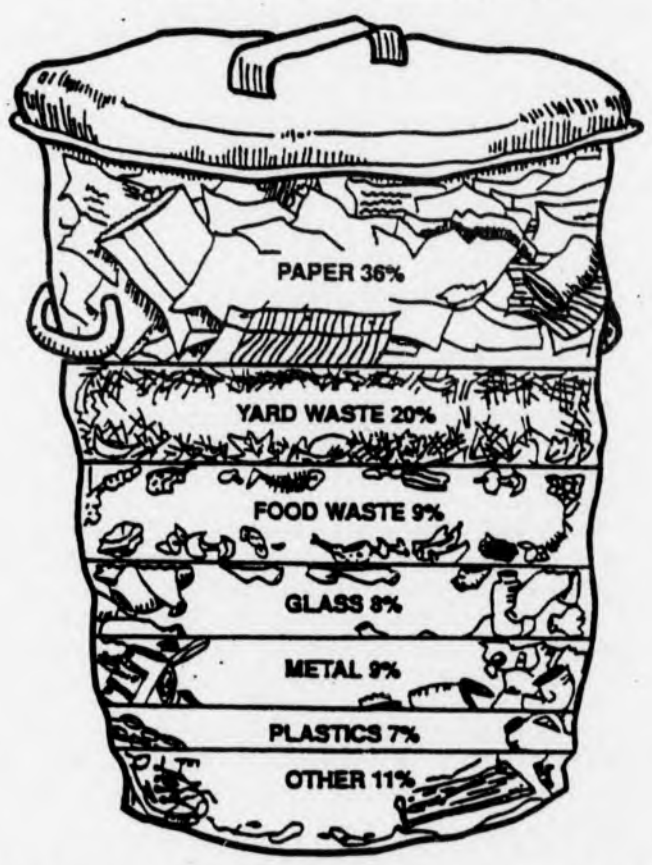
Edward Clark, general manager of the Hanover-based South Shore Division of Waste Management, Inc., says it behooves a company – even one that makes a profit out of hauling trash away – to get involved in recycling.

EVERYONE IS CONCERNED

"We have to live here too," says Clark. "We have children. We are as concerned as everybody else about the environment."

Mary Ann Spicer, communications specialist with Waste Management, says recycling is the way of the future.

"Yes, we need contracts. Yes, it's a business.



"But we also care about the environment. We site landfills that exceed the highest environmental standards," she says.

Spicer says the Resource Guide is the first educational curriculum that Waste Management, Inc., which employs 35,000 people nationwide, has sponsored. However, she notes that all Waste Management employees are members of the National Wildlife Association and the firm has a matching environmental gift fund. If an employee donates $50 for example toward any environmental group, Waste Management will match the donation.

"We have to look to the future," says Spicer. "There is no tolerance for leaking, problem landfills. We have to look at the technology or we'll pay three-fold with a bad reputation."

Copies of the Solid Waste Management Resource Guide for Massachusetts Schools at at cost of $13.95 each are also available to the general public at the State House Book Store (617-727-2834).

Municipal Solid Waste in Massachusetts, By Weight

Trash facts:

- Americans generate enough waste every year to fill a convoy of 10-ton garbage trucks, 145,000 miles long, that would circle the equator six times.
- This trash includes enough aluminum to rebuild the American airfleet 71 times, enough steel to reconstruct Manhattan, and enough paper and wood to heat 5 million homes for 200 years.
- National figures show that Americans generate more than 158 million tons of trash annually, approximately 1/2 ton per person.

The diagram shows the composition of a typical American community's waste stream by percentage of material.

How to take a bite out of the mosquito problem

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

A wet spring and the threat of encephalitis have mosquito control agencies on the alert.

Dan Daly, a spokesman for the Plymouth County Mosquito Control Project said traps have been set to determine whether carriers of the disease have migrated to the South Shore.

There is concern that an outbreak of encephalitis in the Middle Atlantic states last year could move into this region, he said.

"We are very concerned about this year. The history in the Northeast is a cyclical one. This is a year where parts of the East Coast are due for the cycle."

Cohasset is not expected to be a high-risk area, he said.

He said that no horse or human cases of encephalitis were reported last year, and the only carriers caught so far this year have been mosquitos that feed on birds.

A Mass. Department of Public Health fact sheet says the disease, which causes a swelling of the brain, is fatal in 30 percent of cases reported in Massachusetts.

Early symptoms of the disease include a high fever, stiff neck, headache and lethargy.

Daly said that there are actions residents can take to minimize their mosquito problems.

"A lot of people have created their own problems. For instance they leave pool covers on late into the spring," he said.

"People call us and wonder where all the mosquitos are coming from. They don't realize they are breeding in the water right on top of the cover.

"Tires left in the yard can pool water and provide a breeding ground.

"A bird bath can do it. They breed in storm drains. They can even breed in a beer can left at the side of the road."

Daly recommends that residents be aware of where water can pool in their backyard.

Flushing out a bird bath, or overturning a wheelbarrow can often alleviate the problem in a resident's back yard, he said.

He also stressed that anybody with a mosquito problem should contact the control project for spraying.

"Anyone who wants us to come and spray can call us," he said.

"If they want us to spray on their property we can, but we will not spray on anybody's property that does not want us to.

"If somebody doesn't want us to spray they can just let us know with a phone call.

"There really is no health risk but our spraying depends on the wishes of the residents."

Vaccine for pets offered

Driftway Animal Hospital in Scituate has obtained a vaccine to protect dogs against Lyme Disease.

This disease, which is transmitted by tick bites, affects wild and domestic animals, as well as humans.

Doctors at Driftway Animal Hospital have confirmed cases of Lyme Disease in dogs from Scituate and surrounding towns.

The symptoms of Lyme Disease can include fever, lethargy, loss of appetite, pain, sudden lameness, swelling of joints and arthritis.

A test is available to determine if an animal has this disease. It is beneficial to obtain early diagnosis and treatment to prevent long-term problems.

The vaccine for prevention of Lyme Disease is given in two doses, one month apart and thereafter, yearly. Doctors at Driftway recommend that a dog be at least 12 weeks of age to receive the vaccine.

To help prevent Lyme Disease as well as other health problems, it is recommended that owners regularly check their pets for ticks and remove ticks immediately. Avoid touching the tick with bare hands and wash the area with antiseptic.

Driftway Animal Hospital also strongly advises owners to bathe pets routinely with shampoo containing flea and tick killer and to treat pets with flea and tick powder or spray.

For further information about Lyme Disease and vaccinations, call Driftway Animal Hospital at 545-0952.

MDA cable fundraiser

From now until Aug. 10, Continental Cablevision will donate $10 to the Muscular Dystrophy Association for every new cable customer in Cohasset, Hanover, Hingham, Hull, Milton, Norwell, Quincy, Randolph or Scituate. New subscribers will get installation at half price as part of the special offer.

Continental's two South Shore cable systems also helped raise $4,500 for MDA at an auction and party in July they co-sponsored with Barrett Family Restaurants at the Ocean Terrace in Marina Bay.

The event, featuring former Boston Celtics great and SportsChannel personality Tommy Heinsohn as auctioneer, kicked off Continental's month-long campaign for MDA's Greater Boston chapter.

More than 200 people attended the Continental MDA party, at which nearly three dozen items and packages of goods or services were donated by more than 50 merchants and businesses.

Entertainment was provided by comedian Frank Santorelli, courtesy of HBO, and local disc jockey Michael Tucker.

"We are very happy that so many people turned out and grateful for their generosity in supporting the crucial work of MDA in fighting neuromuscular disease," Kathy Taraschi of Continental Cablevision in Quincy said. Taraschi thanked the businesses and merchants that made the evening possible.

Jim Hamilton ...

If pushed to explain the method behind his madness, Hamilton says he likes to take stereotypical situations and put real people in them.

"If we can't laugh at ourselves, what's left?" he asked. "The boards and commissions are really doing the town a service. Those people work like hell, but they can also take it to an extreme."

Hamilton sees himself as a deflator of dogma armed only with a Pentel pen.

He'd also like to encourage the townspeople to work together better.

"Since our town can't expand width-wise – you're either in the sea or Wompatuck State Park – and Hingham and Scituate aren't willing to fork over some of their territories, we've got to make do with the revenues generated by a primarily residential population," Hamilton said.

"Small business enterprises should be encouraged by the town rather than hassled with bureaucratic impediments. Finally, we've all got to get realistic about where the money comes from to fund town services and essentially what we're going to have to do without to keep our cost of living in line with our incomes."

Hamilton goes off on a tangent imagining future cartoons out loud. He hasn't scratched the surface of the great railroad controversy and there is the Goedecke brick walkway to contemplate. He can't wait to get to the paper and pens.

Sometimes life can be a hoot.

New colors...

name rather than hue.

"In response to teacher inquiries, telling us that children no longer related to Prussian history, we changed the name of Prussian blue to midnight blue," she said.

And, she added, in 1962 the company renamed flesh. "It was a proactive decision because we realized that not all flesh is the same color." That color is now known as peach.

Binney & Smith was the first company to manufacture crayons in the United States.

Alice Binney, wife of one of the founders was a teacher. She told her husband that children needed crayons.

The only crayons available at that time were an inferior and expensive European product.

The company that already made pencils and chalk added crayons to their product line in 1903, introducing a box of eight crayons that sold for a nickel.

They still make that same box, but it sells for considerably more than a nickel.

The big box of 64 has been a status object among school children since it was introduced in 1958.

How have the crayon set taken to the new colors?

"We get 200 to 500 calls a day from consumers," said Striglia. "They are asking about the new colors. It's mostly positive feedback.

Not everyone is uniformly thrilled. Baby boomers who grew up drawing fairy princesses with maize hair and violet blue eyes are bereft. They miss those old favorites.

Striglia's only advice is to run to the nearest crayon emporium and buy up the dusty boxes left on the shelf. If you hoard those maize and raw umber crayons, you may be able to corner the market when there's nothing left by the boxes for the fin de siecle kids.

If the last of the old boxes has been sold at your favorite five and 10 cent store, there's nothing left for you to do but lust in your heart for those colors of yesteryear.

Or, you can visit them in the Crayola Hall of Fame to be dedicated Aug. 7 at the Pennsylvania plant.

Thanks to Crayola, we may not know what the shape of the future will be but it definitely will be colored wild strawberry, vivid tangerine and dandelion.

Snakebitten team fights for berth position

By David McKee
Mariner staff

Snakebitten would be too mild a word to describe some of the injuries that have befallen the Cohasset nine-year old traveling team in its first year of competition in the Suburban Youth Baseball League.

So far this season:

Jamie DeMichele broke two fingers sliding across the dance floor at a wedding.

After missing several games, he is back in the line-up.

Steve Baker was thrown off his bike while riding and suffered a broken arm.

He will miss the rest of the season.

Steve Kovach cut his foot on a wire.

"His mother said he was out in the woods jumping up and down when his shoe fell off in mid-air and he landed on a wire," coach John Smoot said.

Kovach received seven stitches and will miss ten days of action.

And Kevin DeVito had his left eye swollen shut by bee stings.

"His mother said he was out in the woods looking for a golf ball when he encountered a bee hive," Smoot said. "He received four or five bee stings around the left eye."

Despite his eye being swollen shut DeVito gritted it out and played in the team's most recent game against Randolph North.

"It's been an unusual time that for sure," Smoot said. "But we're doing well. This team has a lot of character."

Asked if he is expecting any more new maladies to affect his squad, Smoot said, "I think we're through with it. But they're young kids but you never know."

As it stands now even with all the strange injuries, the team is 4-2-2 with two games to play in Division One of the Suburban Youth Baseball League.

Also in Cohasset's division is Randolph North, Braintree National, Duxbury, Hingham and Holbrook.

Smoot said if the team wins its last two games, then the squad makes the playoffs.

The two final games are against Duxbury on August 1st and Hingham August 5th.

"We have a good shot at the playoffs despite the injuries," Smoot said. "It would be nice if we can win both. If we win one of two then it could be interesting."

So far this season the team has defeated Hingham, Holbrook, Randolph and Brantree National.

The squad is quite talented and very deep.

Kovach, when not injured plays both infield and the outfield.

Greg Taylor has done a solid job for Cohasset on the mound.

Alex Schwerin has done a solid all-around job both pitching and playing third base.

Justin Golden has been playing solidly at shortstop and pitcher.

Eric Hanian, called the vacuum cleaner, has done the job at first base.

Jim O'Sullivan has played solidly in the infield and the outfield.

Dennis Rooney has looked solid both pitching and playing the outfield.

Ben Roine, the team's leadoff batter, has played well in left field.

Michael Rossi has done the job at second base.

And Ben Smoot is doing quite nicely behind the plate.

Coach Smoot attributes the team's success to four things.

"We have a lot of talent, character, hustle and determination," he said. "We have really done well in our first year in the tourney."

The 14 member team was selected from the town's own Little League after the regular season was over.

"We chose them after the season came to a close and we had many good players to pick from," Smoot said.

Thundering bats prevail through rain

COHASSET - HINGHAM

The Cohasset ground crew, headed by Mark Schwerin and his daughter's sand bucket, bailed, swept, and mopped the puddles from Barnes Field last Tuesday evening after a solid day of rain. The field was groomed and ready for play by 6:23 p.m., but time ran out for both teams two hours later. With only 3 1/2 innings completed, the game, wisely called on account of darkness, did not count and will have to be replayed from the beginning.

COHASSET 22 - BRAINTREE NATIONAL 12

It rained again last Friday in Cohasset, but the only thunder heard came from the Cardinals' bats. Cohasset scored 22 runs in four innings of play in this rain-shortened game. Denis "Rainmaker" Rooney showed how he earned his nickname during a perfect night at the plate. Each time he came to bat, it rained runs. He had seven RBI's for the night. Steve Baker also had a perfect night at the plate with two hits and a walk. Justin Golden made his own contribution with two triples. Leadoff batter, Ben "TopGun" Roine, reached base four times in four trips to the plate.

Cohasset's defense was flawless behind the pitching of Greg Taylor and Jim O'Sullivan.

COHASSET 5 - RANDOLPH NORTH 5

Alex "Ironman" Schwerin opened the game for Cohasset, pitching three shut-out innings. He struck out four and allowed only two hits. He was supported by solid defense, especially at the close of the second and third innings when Denis Rooney gunned down Randolph runners at the plate. Each time, Rooney fired the ball from right field to catcher Ben Smoot who finished off both plays with sure catches and solid tags.

Randolph held the Cardinals to six hits. Michael Rossi's base hit in the first inning drove in two runs. Cohasset scored another three in the third with key hits by Schwerin and Eric Hanian. Hanian had a perfect night at the plate with a walk and two hits in three trips.

Randolph rallied with five runs in the fifth to tie the game.

PLAYER PROFILES

Alex Schwerin - Alex plays third base and pitcher for the Cardinals. He fields well and may be the best two-strike hitter in the league. He bats right and throws right.

Denis Rooney - Denis plays outfield and pitcher for the Cardinals. He has a strong arm and hits best with men in scoring position. He bats right and throws right.

Michael Rossi - Michael plays any outfield or infield position including catcher. Always around the ball, he plays with keen determination. He bats right and throws right.

UPCOMING GAMES

Cohasset will play Hingham in a rematch of their rained out game on Saturday, Aug. 4, at 10 a.m. at Barnes Field.

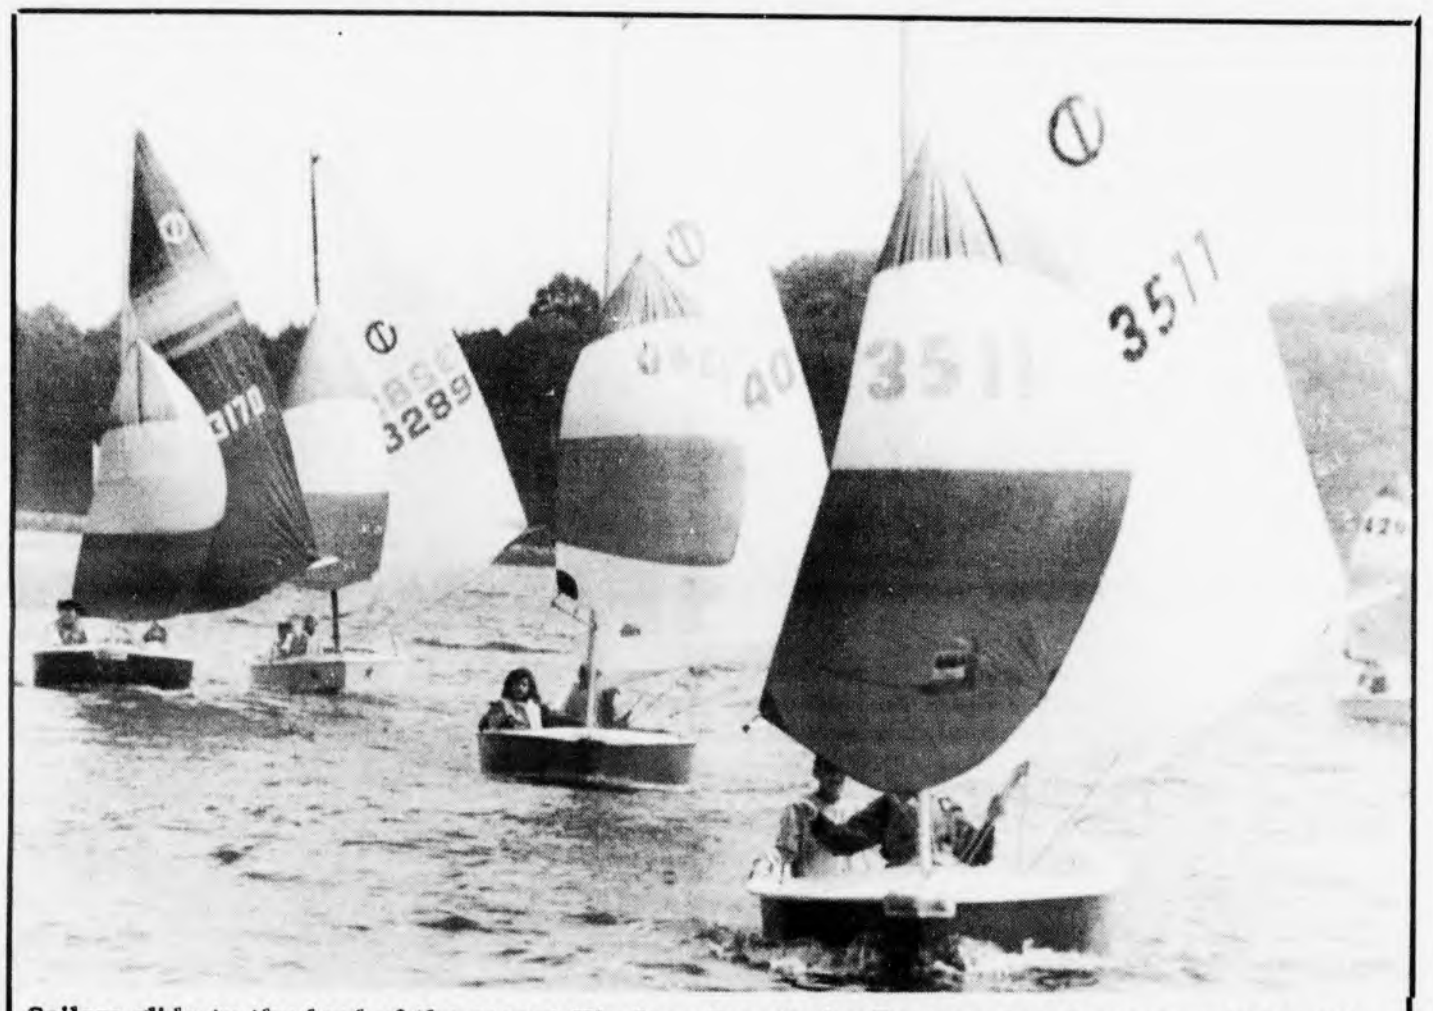
Cohasset sailors compete in the Junior Regatta

By David McKee
Mariner staff

The fog was a thick as pea soup but the races went on at the tenth annual Hingham Bay Junior Regatta last Thursday and Friday.

And despite the uncooperative weather, the event was a success as 104 boats from 11 different yacht clubs competed in five different categories.

"We originally wanted to have five races in each class," regatta coordinator Joe Gautreau said. "But we were still able to have three and that was enough to determine the winners. I consider it a success that we finished the races with the same number of starters."



Just how bad was the fog?

"If you were standing on the dock looking out, you couldn't see the kids and they were less than a quarter of a mile away," Gautreau said.

However at no time was anyone in danger. Gautreau credited volunteers in power boats who surrounded the course as being a key to smooth sailing.

"The people in the crash boats (those in power boats) were just great," Gautreau said. "We had a great turnout and they were able to help guide the sailors in the tough conditions. It was tough sailing but at no time were things unsafe."

As for how the fog affects sailing, Gautreau said, "When its like that you have to be more conservative in your sailing. You stay close to the pack and can't really break away. But credit must be given to the leaders because they had no one to follow."

All together 104 sailors from 11 yacht clubs competed.

Those attending the races came from the Hingham Yacht Club, the Scituate Harbor Yacht Club, the Wessagussett Yacht Club in Weymouth, the South Shore Yacht Club, the Squantum Yacht Club, the Cohasset Sailing Club, the Lincoln Sailing Club in Hingham, the Winchester Boat Club, the Medford Boat Club, the Cottage Park Yacht Club in Winthrop and the Hull Yacht Club.

"Only those from Plymouth didn't attend. If they had, we would have had our biggest turnout ever," Gautreau said.

As for the winners, the Blue-By-U skippered by Tyler Sargent and crewed by Bryan Gautreau took first place in the N-10 Blue division and took home the Curtiss Cup as best skipper.

The Panther skippered by Steven Gudmand and crewed by Kevin Coughlin took first place in the N-10 Red division.

The Juice skippered by Matthew Devine and crewed by Josh Prime won the N-10 White division. They took home the Rockland Trust Trophy.

Skipper Keith Garland and crew mate Josh Winslow took first place in the 420 Fleet division.

Tim Herzog took first place in the Laser division.

And skipper John Mullane and crew mate John Diamond took first place in the Duplin division.

"The weather was terrible but there was some great sailing on the bay," Gautreau said. "All the kids showed a lot of talent and character being out there in those conditions. And down the road it will help them become better sailors."

After the races there was a dinner and a dance with a DJ for all those who competed.

"It was a great way to close the races," Gautreau said. "After the races everyone got together and ate dinner and then danced the night away. The kids had a great time and that was the most important part."

Mihos kicks off campaign

Senatorial candidate Christy Mihos (R) kicked off his campaign with a rally held at the Barker Tavern last week.

Mihos, CEO and President of Christy Markets, said "The issue is clear. Massachusetts has been spending more than its collected revenues for the past 4 years. The proposed $13.695 billion 1991 budget, while it shows less than 3 percent growth, is already several hundred million dollars out of balance, and is sizably larger than recommended by either the House or the Senate," Mihos said.

In response to the CLT ballot question that would roll back state taxes and fees to their July, 1988 levels Mihos said he felt a 10 percent cut in a proposed operating budget shouldn't bring a complete halt to state government.

"There is nothing wrong with Massachusetts that can't be fixed. Some politicians would have you believe that running state government is unique, that it takes a special kind of political operative — which they claim to be — to have gotten the state into this mess," Mihos said. "If taxpayers are serious about change, then they've got to change the players on Beacon Hill, and vote in their best Republican managers."

Creed plans fundraiser

John Creed, Democratic candidate for the Norfolk/Plymouth Senate seat, believes his campaign is going well.

Creed said he has been talking to people outside post offices, on street corners and at local landfills, and he marched in the Marshfield 350th parade, the Duxbury July 4th parade and most recently at Hull's Heritage Days parade.

Tickets are selling well for the Bob Cousy Sports Night event scheduled for August 9 at 7:30 p.m. at the Barker Tavern in Scituate. The former Boston Celtic great will tell some basketball stories and field some questions during this Creed campaign fundraiser.

For ticket information, call 837-8285, 834-7075 or 545-3736.

Studds opens headquarters

Congressman Gerry Studds today signalled the beginning of his campaign for reelection to the U.S. House of Representatives by opening his 1990 campaign headquarters.

The Studds campaign office is located at 75 Samoset Street (Route 44) in the town of Plymouth. The campaign telephone number is (508) 747-0090.

Studds, who has represented the Tenth Congressional District of Massachusetts since 1972, said the new headquarters would coordinate his reelection campaign throughout the South Shore, the Greater New Bedford area, and Cape Cod and the Islands.

In announcing the office opening, Congressman Studds stressed that his 1990 campaign "will lean heavily on the town-by-town, precinct-by-precinct grassroots organization which has characterized our past efforts."

"We will again run a very aggressive, energetic campaign in each of the 45 communities which comprise the Tenth District," Studds said.

Hussey meets Sununu

Donald Hussey, Republican candidate for state senate, met recently with White House Chief of staff John Sununu and expressed his concerns about state government.

After Sununu's 20-minute address, Hussey reminded those in attendance about the importance of having an efficiently-run state.

"To avoid a worsening of the state's economy, a balance must be struck within the state legislature," Hussey said. "A two party state would go a long way towards a properly functioning government. The mere fact that Massachusetts is approaching junk bond status is an embarrassing reflection upon our current band of lawmakers."

1.) Is there a difference in the dieting needs of the obese compared to those who just want to lose a few pounds?
Yes. It is desirable for the obese to lose weight quickly to gain a sense of accomplishment, a key activating element. Traditional reducing diets, on which 1-1/2 to 2-1/2 pounds per week are lost may work for those slightly overweight. However, obese people are likely to lose motivation before they lose weight on such diets.

2.) With the odds seemingly against the obese, is there really an effective treatment? Yes. Most researchers agree that sensible treatment should involve a multidisciplinary approach that decreases calorie intake, increases energy output through exercise and teaches behavior modification to maintain weight loss permanently. The Optifast® Program, combines a medically supervised, supplemented fast on which patients safely lose 2-5 pounds per week, with behavior modification, nutrition education and exercise education. The program, developed by Sandoz Nutrition, is available solely through hospitals and multi-specialty clinics. To be accepted into the program, individuals must be highly motivated and free of contraindicating health problems. This program, although an unprecedented medical success, may not be the program for you at this time in your life. This is not a "pay your membership", or "sign up" approach for every 50 pounds or more overweight person. The Optifast® Program is a highly structured, 26 week program of supplemented fasting, refeeding and stabilization. The program provides a unique combination of medical monitoring by a physician and a registered nurse, group sessions coordinated by a licensed psychologist and education by registered dieticians. The candidate for the program must be ready to make a commitment of time, money, and lifestyle change.

3.) Why is behavior modification so important? Behavior modification helps the obese change the habits that make them overweight. It contributes to effective weight reduction and, perhaps more important, weight maintenance. The ultimate goal for all patients is to learn how to achieve dietary self-control by understanding and manipulating the factors interfering with adherence to their low-fat eating plan.

4.) What is the role of exercise in weight reduction?
Overeating and inactivity are partners in obesity. Incorporating regular, moderate exercise into one's lifestyle may contribute to weight loss in several ways. It burns calories, burns fat and builds muscle. It also speeds up the rate at which those calories are burned, helping counteract the slowing of metabolism the body initiates when the obese person goes on a diet. Physical activity also helps people feel better about themselves, and encourages them to adhere to a weight loss program. Experts note that neither dieting, nor exercise alone are as effective in weight reduction as a combination of both.

5.) How does the cycle of weight loss and gain so many dieters experience affect obesity? Studies show that repeat dieters have a tougher time losing and keeping off weight than those who have not dieted in the past. In a University of Pennsylvania Obesity Research Group study, laboratory rats on a weight loss diet took 21 days to lose a specific amount of weight and 46 days to regain it. When subjected to a second round of dieting, they took 40 days to lose the same amount of weight but gained it back in only 14 days. In dieting, they lose both fat and muscle. However, they gained back proportionately more fat than they had lost. Scientists think this may be due to physiological changes that prompt the body to slow the rate at which it burns calories to maintain vital processes.

6.) What is the benefit of a modified fast? Research has shown that fasting is one of the most effective methods of losing weight. But prolonged fasting can result in many complications, including demineralization of bone, muscle wasting, protein losses, fatigue and loss of a sense of well being. With a "modified" fast, however, the patient gets the benefits of a rapid weight loss, diminished appetite and increased energy, with few, reversible, and mild complications.

7.) What other benefits can patients expect? Blood pressure levels improve in the majority of patients. The vast majority also experience an improvement in blood sugar level, and quite often Type II diabetics achieve an acceptable blood sugar level without medication. In addition, most patients report an improved feeling of well-being marked by reduction in shortness of breath, relief of back and joint pain, and an increase in endurance and agility.

8. How does a patient begin the program? The first step is to call and schedule a FREE, NO OBLIGATION, private appointment with our Program Director. All aspects are presented privately and confidentially, in depth, allowing you to make an informed, educated decision.

9.) Then what? Then, it's ABC.

A. The Supplemented Fasting Phase lasts for 12 weeks.
During this phase you will be put on a very low calorie diet that will consist soley of the Optifast® formulation. The formulation comes in a variety of flavors, is nutritionally balanced, and contains 100% of the daily recommended requirements of protein, vitamins and minerals. There will be weekly consultation to monitor your safety and progress. In addition, at your weekly sessions, you will participate in a behavior modification group.

B. The Refeeding and Stabilization Phases lasts for 13 weeks.
During refeeding you will be gradually reintroduced to regular food and withdrawn from the Optifast® formulation. Weekly medical consultations and group behavior modification sessions will continue. Most patients continue to lose weight during this period. Once solid foods have been completely reintroduced into your diet, you will move into stabilization. Relapse prevention techniques are stressed during this period as you gain confidence necessary to maintain your weight loss.

C. Maintenance: An Additional Support.
Following stabilization, the additional support by weight maintenance sessions will be provided. Statistics show that people who do so experience continued success.

For information or to schedule a private appointment with no obligation, call David McQuaid, Program Director, Marilyn Mullen or Donna Badger at 340-8800 Monday through Friday between 9am and 5pm. The Optifast staff is a dedicated and caring group whose every effort is to give you personal attention and a superior, medically supervised weight management program.

Support increases for the pump

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

Selectmen got a preview of what's in store when the Village Renaissance brings back the old town pump.

The pump and its surrounding park are closer to completion because of a generous gift from Phyllis Leslie in honor of her husband's birthday. Donald Leslie turned 85 on Aug. 6.

Coordinator Jacqueline Dormitzer's progress report came with an architect's rendition of the vest-pocket park courtesy of Jim Sandell. Sandell's drawing shows a semi-circle of cobblestones set off from the street by granite posts and nautical chain. The wooden pump and a granite basin sit within the park.

"But no rosa rugosa," Selectman Diana Kornet joked. The rosa rugosa bushes at Government Island were the subject of a mini-controversy earlier in the year.

The working pump probably will be made of teak, Dormitzer said.

Tina Watson of the hardware store offered to plant and maintain a garden area included in the design. Additional maintenance work will be bankrolled by a special fund set up by the renaissance committee. The Village Renaissance group will accept donations to the maintenance fund.

Dormitzer said the police department and highway department have been supportive of the project.

"The highway department has been wonderful," she said. "They've been an essential part of the project. It wouldn't have been possible without them." Dormitzer singled out Harold Litchfield and Carl Sestito for special mention.

The fire chief has been "generally unenthusiastic"because of concerns about maneuvering firetrucks around the park, Dormitzer said. The park juts out into the intersection because the semi-circle has a 14-foot radius. Dormitzer said Chief Brock wouldn't try to block the project despite his concerns.

The park may improve traffic flow and visibility by bringing cars further into the intersection before beginning their turns or mergers, Dormitzer claimed.

Selectmen insisted the town pump committee get written reports from the police department, fire department and highway department before proceeding with the project.

School fees rise to $75 for 1st sport

By Patricia Desmond
Mariner staff

Last year through tremendous effort the Friends of Cohasset Sports managed to raise $12,000 to offset the school's athletic budget.

This year the small group responsible for that work cannot promise to repeat the record.

So school committee voted Monday night to increase the sports user fee to $75 for one sport to take up what would otherwise be a deficit in the budget. Students playing two sports would pay $125 and students playing three sports would pay $150.

The unanimous vote came after much discussion of the athletics program, which members agreed was not hurt by the imposition of a $50 user fee last year. Participation in the sports program increased despite the new fee.

The increase was voted right after the committee voted to make lacrosse a varsity sport. Figures generated by Ken Eckberg, who has volunteered to coach for a year without compensation, show the sport could be self supporting.

School Committee member Ralph Kidder said he did not think it was appropriate to offer the sport without paying the head coach.

"It's only self supporting because of the way it's presented," Kidder said.

Russell Reidy, school committee member, suggested going for a higher user fee and making a commitment to the program.

School Superintendent Stephen Hart said the $75 figure proposed would cover the lacrosse expenses.

This past year the user fee generated $24,000 in school revenue. The full athletics budget is Weeping cherry dedicated at Harbor to the memory of John A. Lanata Jr.

John A. Lanata Jr. would have turned 20 on August 6.

He died June 10 in a car accident as he headed home to Cohasset after visiting a friend in New York state.

But his relatives and friends went ahead and celebrated his birthday and his life on Monday.

Nancy Lanata, his mother, said the members of his graduating class from Cohasset High decided to plant a tree in his memory. She decided to hold the dedication ceremony and a small dinner on her son's birthday.

"It was a terrible loss," she said. "I still can't believe it. He was such a wonderful boy. He had so many friends. What can I tell you?"

The tree dedicated in memory of a young man who loved the sea was planted before the actual ceremony at the town pier on the edge of Cohasset Harbor.

The tree, a weeping cherry, is somewhat protected by a wrought iron fence. A plaque will be placed on the tree soon.

Mrs. Lanata said she hopes the scholarship fund established in his name will grow. Contributions can be sent to the John A. Lanata Jr. Scholarship Fund, in care of Myles Standish Federal Credit Union, P.O. Box 9102, Marshfield, MA 02050.

She and her husband, John A. Lanata Sr., hosted a dinner for relatives and close friends at the Log and Line in the late afternoon.

A second seating accommodated more friends.

It seemed the entire Class of 1989 stood by and watched the simple ceremony at the Harbor.

There was a small bouquet of helium balloons tied to the tree. A graduation photo was taped to the tree. Relatives and friends used gardening tools to add more earth to the base of the tree's new roots.

The ceremony was filled with meaning, even hope.

John Lanata was born in Quincy. He and his

Cohasset's week

Unemployment rate rises

The downturn in employment is affecting the town of Cohasset.

The town's unadjusted unemployment rate for the month of May was 5.5 percent, according to a spokesman for the Division of Employment Security.

The May figures are the most recent available for the town. Only a year before (May, 1989) the unemployment rate was 2.9 percent.

Nationally the unemployment rate was 5.2 percent for last month, which is slightly less than the state unemployment rate of 5.8 percent.

A year ago the state rate was 3.3 percent. The state rate has been steadily climbing since May, 1988, when it dipped to 2.7 percent.

School appointments set

The following appointments were made by the school committee Monday: Judith Ritts, half-time resource room teacher at Deer Hill; Joy Harris, part-time instructional aide, resource room at Deer Hill; Marsha Silvia, I.M.S. aide/computer lab aide at Deer Hill; Joan Pyfrom, part-time Chapter I tutor at Deer Hill; and Janice Bierwert, bookkeeper, school business office.

LAX gets varsity status

The lacrosse program was granted varsity status by the school committee Monday.

Last year the program was offered as a school club. It attracted 54 participants.

Ken Eckberg, who has volunteered to serve as head lacrosse coach without payment of the $2,400 contractual fee, told the school committee it was becoming difficult to schedule games against other teams.

Without varsity status, a win against Cohasset is just a scrimmage for other high school teams.

Two sets of figures were available for school committee discussion. The first was the $2,500 figure that Eckberg said the program would cost in the first year. That is without paying a coach and without buying uniforms. In the past football jerseys have been used by lacrosse players and the team members bought their own shorts.

The second figure is the $7,000, originally requested by Eckberg to give the program varsity status. The second figure is what he termed a reasonable proposal for the sport.

Two other sports at the junior/senior high school still have club status — sailing and skiing.

In response to questioning by Nancy Sandell, committee member, Eckberg said there was a difference between lacrosse and the other two club sports. He said both sailing and skiing offer open competitions whereas lacrosse games demand scheduling with other teams.

Sandell said she didn't want the members of the sailing and skiing teams to feel they were not being supported by the school committee.

Taxes will be examined

School Superintendent Stephen Hart is trying to find out what the effect of the passage of the tax reduction referendum sponsored by Citizens for Limited Taxation would have on the town in time for the next school committee meeting, scheduled for Monday, Aug.20.

At the request of the school committee he is looking for estimates. The Mass. Municipal Association pegged the effect at $36,149 but Hart says that figure fails to take into account possible cuts in other state grants. He said he suspects the impact will be in the $60,000 range.

More to come...

Meeting night changed

School committee will not be changing its meeting night from the traditional Monday in September as recently discussed.

My family and I have enjoyed meeting with you at your parades and community functions this summer. We thank you for your many courtesies and your support.

A little about my campaign...

As your Republican Senator on Beacon Hill...my priority will be our towns, our schools, our safety delivery system (police and fire) and realistic local aid funds.

Cuts in local state aid are now fighting words...the CLT petition is a message. It's not a solution, but it gets us to the bargaining table in January.

Only 9 of your 40 Massachusetts Senators are Republican. A parity of parties must be accomplished in state government this year if you wish to affect state government.

If you're thinking of change, think Republican in September and November.

Committee seeks a 'safe home' for teenagers

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

Keg parties and drunken drivers are a regular part of the Cohasset police department's beat. Just check the police log for any week. It's a facet of life in Cohasset the drug and alcohol committee aims to change.

Originally formed to study the problem of drug and alcohol use and abuse in Cohasset, selectmen made the committee a permanent part of town government earlier this year.

Committee chairman Keith Knowles finds working with the committee rewarding.

"I leave these meetings so excited, so up and so enthusiastic," he said. "There are so many things that can be done. The key is finding people that are willing to take the job on and do it."

Knowles is the only member of the original group still serving on the committee. The others said they couldn't rejoin because of other commitments, he said.

"It's unfortunate the original committee had to disband, but I can see their efforts starting to come to fruition," Knowles said.

Although he misses the old crew, he finds the new group special. Several members have professional experience in the field and everyone is committed to being proactive.

"This is the first committee I've ever worked on that has attracted two strong groups," Knowles said.

The committee wants to get a safe home program established in the community as their first goal. The program has been successful in all the communities where it has been set up.

In the program, parents publicly commit themselves to refusing to serve or permit the consumption of alcoholic beverages at their children's parties. They also agree to be at home during the parties.

The sponsoring organization prints the list of participating parents. That way parents know which parties will be "safe" for their children to attend and kids have some positive peer pressure.

According to Knowles, the group plans to target junior high students initially. The committee reasons that this age group is only just beginning to be subjected to the social pressures of dating and parties. It is an opportunity to get in before peer pressure has made drinking "cool."

The original committee heard horror stories of kids who threw parties where it was known alcohol would not be served and no one came. The safe home program gives parents and kids a way to resist peer pressure without feeling out of it, Knowles said.

The committee is wise enough to know the safe home program won't change things overnight.

"All these things are really long term," Knowles said. "You can't put them in place this year and expect it to work miracles."

The committee believes an essential part of making any drug and alcohol abuse prevention program work is community-wide support. They are asking the Parent School Organization to cosponsor the safe home program.

Beginning with the youth of Cohasset is a calculated move. It is a readily definable and reachable group — and there is wide-spread agreement that children should not use alcohol or drugs.

Although the agreement is wide-spread, it is not universal.

"There are adults who condone, at the very least, consumption of alcohol by kids. At the very worst, they encourage it," Knowles said. "Adults who feel that way have to be subjected to some sort of censure."

Although the first target of the committee will be school children, that is not the only focus of the group.

"We have to reach the adults, whether they are parents or not," Knowles said. "We have to provide resources for young adults, the elderly and all those in between."

The committee is battling a perception that Cohasset is too nice to have that kind of a problem.

"There are national and regional statistics we can use, but those statistics are easy to overlook and deny," Knowles said. The committee thinks they need to shove incidents and statistics from the police report in front of residents on a daily basis. Perhaps if taxpayers see how much of their public safety dollars are consumed by police officers and firefighters dealing with drug and alcohol-related incidents, they will be moved to action, too.

Knowles said the committee is prepared for it to take a long time. He compares it to the anti-smoking movement. That took a generation of persistent education, information and activism. Now more and more smokers — like Knowles himself — have quit.

Although he didn't get any direct pressure from non-smokers, finding an area he could smoke in got harder and harder. It just wasn't socially acceptable to smoke around other people.

Knowles hopes the committee can help produce the same kind of attitudes about drug and alcohol use. They hope to link forces with as many groups and organizations in the community to spread the word.

In the meantime, the committee will continue meeting every other Tuesday from 7:30 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. at town hall. The next meeting is slated for Aug. 14. The public is encouraged to attend the meetings.

Committee members include Knowles, Ted Campbell, Tom Wigmore, Elaine Davis, Susan Schumaker, Sandra Kent, Mary Oliver and Mike McFadden. Chief Kealey designated Sgt. Robert Jackson as liaison from the police department.

The committee has asked for a representative from the school faculty and student population and someone from the elder community to expand the perspectives and contacts of the group.

family moved to Cohasset when he was four. He attended Cohasset schools from kindergarten through high school.

He was involved with boating most of his life. He had been on the football team while in high school.

After graduation, he attended the College of Boca Raton in Florida where he was majoring in marketing.

Besides his parents, he leaves two sisters, Julie Lanata and Jeanna Lanata, both of Cohasset, his grandparents. Hazel Giagrando of Hull and Joseph L. Lanata and Rita McKenzie, both of Hingham.

Last month the Scituate Harbor Marina renamed its annual bluefishing tournament in honor of the accident victim.

The new tournament trophy has been inscribed "Dedicated to a young man who loved the sea from all who loved him."

Tennis lessons are extended

Due to the unusual amount of rain and inclement weather conditions to date this summer, the recreation department is extending Youth Tennis Lessons one week longer than originally scheduled.

Therefore, Youth Tennis will meet during the week of Monday, August 20, on the regular schedule for Monday-Wednesday and Tuesday-Thursday. However, the program ends at 1 p.m. Thursday, Aug. 23. All participants should report to the usual class times and day during the week of Aug. 20, 1990.

The N.E.L.T.A. Tournament will be conducted as usual and be concluded by Friday, August 17. We hope that you will be able to take the advantage of the additional week of lessons.

The Cohasset recreation department will offer special, intermediate, and advanced level, low-impact, aerobics exercise classes, Tuesday through Friday mornings, from 8:30 to 10 a.m., in the Town Hall auditorium. Class will begin on Tuesday, August 7, and the session will end on Friday, August 30.

All classes will be taught by Margaret Watson and the fee for the four day, one and one half hour per day workout, for the four week program, is $75 per person. While this program is open to anyone wishing to join, it is stressed that it is not a beginner program.

Registrations will be held at the first class on Tuesday, August 7, at 8:30 a.m., Cohasset Town Hall. Also if you would like more details regarding the program, Watson will provide them that morning, prior to class.

Participants who wish, may register for any number of days, rather than the full four day program and fees will be prorated. Checks for payment should be made out to: Town of Cohasset and may be brought to the first class.

The Cohasset Recreation Commission will sponsor a concert by the 30-piece South Shore Concert Band, under the direction of Mr. Richard P. Whitmarsh on Cohasset Common on Tuesday, Aug. 14, at 7:30 p.m.

Concerts are free of charge and the public is cordially invited to attend. Please bring your own blankets or lawn chairs to sit on. Use of insect repellant is advised.

The 1990 concert series is made possible by the generosity of the South Shore Playhouse Associates, Inc., (South Shore Music Circus Community Trust Fund), and matching grants from the Brockton Federation of Musicians.

Sports user fees increase...

$122,798. School committee had allocated $82,798 of town funds toward the program, according to Hart.

Students who cannot afford the user fee can apply through the school administration for a waiver.

He said the process was used last year and he thought it was used judiciously.

He pointed out to the school committee that the Friends of Cohasset Sports, the group that had taken on the fund-raising project were for the most part people who were also paying the user fee for their children.

"They raised $12,000 through tremendous effort last year," Hart said.

The goal the group has set was $20,000.

"The bulk of the work falls on the shoulders of a few," he said. "They were becoming outcasts in their own neighborhoods. People were pulling the shades when they saw them coming to the door."

The user fee would have to be about $225 per student per sport if the athletics program were to be self supporting.

"This is not something I approve of," Hart said referring to the whole user fee concept.

Jack Delorenzo told the school committee that if the existence of the athletic program were threatened people would find ways to raise the funds.

School Committee Chairman Barbara Bliss said she wanted all the members of the Friends of Cohasset Sports acknowledged for the efforts. Letters will go out to the people who worked on the project last year.

'End is in sight' for new transfer station

Recycling is an unqualified success in Cohasset. The recycling transfer facility itself has been an ongoing headache. At long last, however, the end may be in sight. and selectmen authorized partial payments to both the construction company and the consultants on the project.

Anson Whealler, chairman of the transfer station building committee, asked selectmen to release $5,000 of the $10,200 being withheld from Sciaba Construction Corporation in payment for "as built" construction drawings.

"The committee would like to reinforce the idea that if you do some work, you get some pay," Whealler said. He hopes the company gets the message that if they complete the project, they will get all the money being withheld.

There was one little catch: the "as built" drawing contained an error. The drawing shows the steel baffle that keeps trash from falling down between the building and the trailer as having been completed as designed. That is one of the items on the punch list to be completed before payment will be made.

The committee will send a letter with the check stating that there is an error on the drawings that must be completed in addition to the four remaining items on the punch list.

Whealler also requested release of $1692 to SEA Consultants, Inc for getting the construction company to prepare the "as built" drawings.

SEA had been seeking payment in full, contending there was nothing further they could do to get the construction company to complete the items on the punch list.

The committee intends to hold SEA to contract specifications that require the consultants to serve as the town's liaison with the contractor until all work is completed.

SEA originally claimed the town owed them a total of $9,632, but later conceded their figures were off the mark by $3,500. An additional $2,000 is in dispute.

Whealler said while the town accountant examines the records to determine the exact amount owed, the committee is proceeding on the assumption that they owe SEA only $4,192. Of that sum, they are holding back $2,500 until SEA fulfills its contractual obligations as liaison.

"The end is in sight," selectman Diana Kornet said.

Dog officer will keep vehicle at home

Animal control officer William Quigley has been granted permission to keep his official vehicle at his home to save time and mileage.

Selectmen denied the request previously because Quigley did not reside in Cohasset and there were concerns about non-official use of the vehicle. Quigley recently moved. Although he still resides in Hingham, his home is near the town line.

"When he only works so few hours, it only makes sense not to require him to drive deep into Cohasset when he might have a call on Forest Avenue," selectman Diana Kornet argued.

Selectman Jane Goedecke agreed, saying when the advisory committee agreed to the purchase of the vehicle they thought keeping it parked at his home made sense in terms of time and mileage. Goedecke added that Quigley should be required to keep mileage records and turn them in on a monthly basis.

Executive secretary Greg Doyon said the mileage requirement could be added to the weekly records Quigley already maintains.

Chairman Rocco Laugelle also requested that Doyon find out how many miles were on the vehicle when it was turned over to Quigley and what the current mileage is.

Town hires cleaners

Selectmen have authorized a $2,200 transfer from the reserve fund to cover cleaning expenses at town hall while the employee who usually performs the service is laid up.

The cleaning service will clean town hall two to three times per week for $110 to $130 per cleaning.

Executive secretary Greg Doyon estimated the service could be needed for as long as two months.

Photos capture Barnard's talent

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

Serendipity — that delightful experience of finding something wonderful or valuable when you weren't expecting it or looking for it — has shaped Jeremy Barnard's life and art.

Barnard has been taking photographs for 20 years. Most of his work is in black and white unless the subject matter just screams out for color. He said he photographs things so he can "show other people the things I see that interest me."

A retrospective of two decades of discoveries hangs on the walls of the South Shore Art Center from now until Sept. 1. Barnard submitted more than 100 photographs. The center edited his collection to 79.

Although omitting any of the photographs was difficult, Barnard said Susan Nalband from the center made culling his assortment a tolerable experience.

"She was sensitive and gentle about being ruthless," he said.

Barnard said he generally just happens upon the images that he photographs. Although both Barnard and the late Robert Mapplethorpe, whose retrospective is drawing more attention, capture a moment in time, their approaches are very different.

Mapplethorpe carefully constructed the composition of his photographs so carefully and formally that his nudes and flowers appear almost sculpted. Barnard generally takes things as they come. On the rare occasions where he sets up a photograph, it too seems casual and unstudied.

"I'm not to calculating. I much prefer to go through life being ready," Barnard said. "I find myself ending up in the right place at the right time."

He calls it photographer's luck, but he is always prepared to take advantage of the moment. Barnard admits he is never more than an arm's length away from a camera.

And luck can only carry you just so far.

Life and nature put the subject matter in front of him, but he has the rare gift of really seeing what he is looking at. Eel Rock is a case in point.

This photo, taken in 1983, is of a rock formation near his summer home on the Maine coast. Most people would look at the rock and see a rock. Barnard looked at the rock and saw eels.

Barnard's favorite from the exhibit, French Woman taken in the south of France in 1973, is another example.

In the photograph a woman sits in front of a partially white-washed wall doing her knitting. Cats keep her company. Barnard was driving around the area when he saw the woman and the wall. What captured his attention was the clear image of a lake with a stand of trees reflected in the newly white-washed portion.

Barnard said he had to photograph the scene, had to capture the image on film because, he said, "I would love to be able to paint but I can't."

Even having the eye of an artist or the soul of a poet isn't always enough. It takes carefully honed skills and craftsmanship to translate what the eye sees into an image frozen for all time.

One of the reasons Barnard prefers to work in black and white comes from his need to exercise artistic control.

"I thought my wife would never believe this one," Barnard said.

Some people don't get the joke, they just get offended, he said. But the photo hangs in the Bancroft Gallery at the art center so you can judge for yourself.

Although his subject matter grew less intense, when he pulled together the photographs for the show he discovered that some images get repeating themselves.

He knew he had a fascination with rocks. He even mounted a whole show of rock photographs. He didn't know that trees and wood were recurring images in his work.

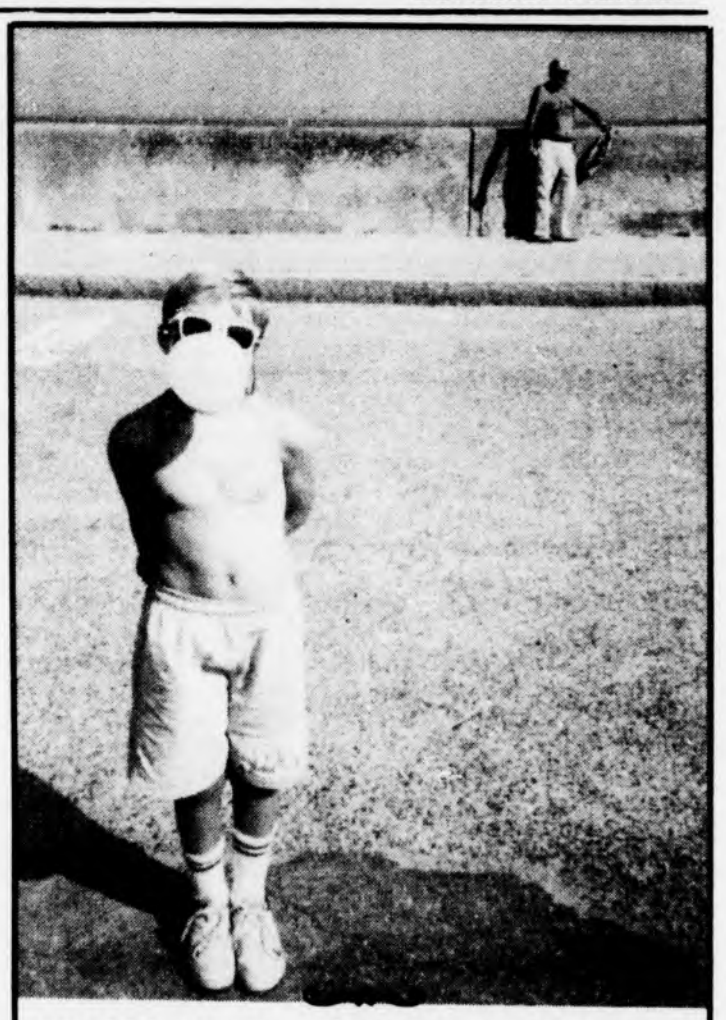
Dolls come up again and again. An early work, Girl with Dolls, was taken in 1970. It shows a little girl on a ramshackle porch with a lineup of dolls. Later photographs show antique dolls.

"I was fascinated for a while with the effigies and images we create for ourselves intentionally or inadvertently," Barnard said.

Another image of ourselves is the freak show Barnard photographed surreptitiously at the 1973 Boston City Fair. Barnard mounted two photographs in a single mat and entitled them The Hook and The Pay off.

The first photograph shows the "billboards" with the expected assortment of fat men, bearded boys and amputees. The second shows a baby in a jar of formaldehyde. The baby has two bodies, back to back, connected to a single head.

Barnard was told the baby was stillborn in 1901 to a brother and sister. In 1910, the federal government began circulating the bottled baby as a scare tactic against incest.



The photographer also has a lyric sense. Two photographs of black swans are particularly memorable in addition to a wide array of landscapes and portraits.

This retrospective is particularly special to Barnard. Although his home and studio is in Georgetown, Barnard lived in Scituate until he was 18 and spent most of his free time in Cohasset. His parents live in Cohasset. In a sense, he has come home in triumph.

Barnard's photographs will remain on display until Sept. 1. They are available for purchase. The South Shore Art Center is located at 119 Ripley Road in Cohasset.

The center is open Monday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. There is no charge for admission although donations are gratefully accepted.

"The black and white medium lends itself to control in the lab," Barnard explained. "It really is a lot more forgiving and gives you a lot more freedom to express yourself.

"Bubble Boy" (By Jeremy Barnard)

"There's more craft in it."

Barnard also knows how to wait, how to be patient.

"Butch Tree is a scene I saw 10 years ago, but it just wasn't right to photograph," he said of the tree that appears to have just gotten a Bob Haldeman-style butch haircut. "I studied it for 10 years. I found that the pruning happened with some predictability, but I needed the right weather conditions."

What he wanted was a morning with enough morning ground fog to diffuse the trees in the background so the tree and the fence would stand out in stark relief against a soft backdrop. Photographers can use special lenses, filters and developing techniques to replicate foggy mornings, but it would have been a poor imitation of the photograph Barnard was really after.

And then it happened. He woke up one morning to the perfect weather.

"I got it. Ten years and I got it."

Getting into photography in the first place was serendipitous.

In 1968, the Bucknell University "drop out" and seasick sailor on an oceanographic research vessel was given a movie camera by his brother-in-law. In short order, he found himself enrolled at Emerson College making weird movies.

He loved the movies, but one of his professors suggested he give still photography a shot. He scooped up a pawn shop special and gave it a try.

"The first time I came out of my friend's bathroom with my wet film in hand I was hooked. I had fallen hopelessly in love with photography," Barnard said. "The affair is now over 20 years old and it continues to grow in strength and depth."

As he prepared for the retrospective exhibit he found he had both changed and come full circle in his work.

In the early years, his photographs reflect his political and social concerns. The images are often of poverty and homelessness.

"I would go to the places where important things were happening," Barnard said. "I did a lot of shouting."

Although he still cares deeply about the same issues, he has "learned how to speak more softly and even how to whisper. I discovered happiness, tenderness, love and humor."

The humor comes through in some of the nude studies he has done.

The Impossibility focuses on a rather large tush about to land in a dollhouse chair. Staples has a longer story.

Barnard had the misfortune to need a double hernia operation. When he got home from the hospital, he stripped off the bandaging to check himself out, when what to his wondering eyes should appear but two lineups of staples.

"I was absolutely horrified," Barnard said. "I didn't know they used these things. I thought my doctor mistook me for a business form."

When the initial shock of being spindled, folded and mutilated passed, Barnard got the giggles.

"I thought, 'Staples, staples. Milk, eggs, butter. Those are also staples.' "

Still giggling, he gathered milk, eggs, butter, a stapler — and himself — and set up a shot of the staples of life.

Higher sports user fees were inevitable in a budget crunch

This week the school committee upped the athletic user fee from $50 to $75 for students who play one sport.

The fee decreases for students who play more than one sport, with a three sport player paying $150 for the privilege.

The vote on the new fee schedule was five to nothing, with all members of the school committee offering words of support of the athletics program and the students who participate.

The change was needed to cover the fact that the Friends of Cohasset Sports can no longer hope to raise large chunks of money to support the budget.

The new fee schedule doesn't cover the cost of the athletic program. What it will do is raise about $40,000 needed out of the total $122,798 in the present budget.

Last year the user fees raised about $24,000. The Boosters aimed at providing $20,000 on its own.

The school system is no longer expecting the booster club — made up for the most part of parents who already pay user fees for the program — to continue the herculean task of supporting the sports budget.

As School Superintendent Stephen Hart told school committee members Monday night, people were beginning to draw the blinds when they saw members of the booster club approach the door.

"They were becoming unwelcome in their own neighborhoods," Hart said.

School committee members asked Hart to send letters of thanks to the 16 or so people who had been responsible for working for the boosters club.

When the user fee began last year, school committee members said they worried about participation dropping off.

But last year, as the secondary population declined, participation in sports increased.

Maybe people value something that costs money more than something that is free.

Maybe it takes coming close to losing something to truly value it.

Whatever the reason, school committee members talked at length about the fact that they want to support the sports program.

There is a mechanism for a student who cannot afford the fee to seek a waiver through school administration officials.

Hart said he thought the waiver system was used "judiciously" last year.

In the best of all worlds, the community would have written the school system a blank check for the educational budget and there would have been no user fee and no need for sports fund-raising efforts.

But we live in a reality where hard choices have to be made.

The school committee made another of the hard choices Monday. We think they chose wisely and well.

Old Colony plan supported

By Marilyn Jackson
Mariner staff

Restoration of commuter rail on the Old Colony Railroad's three lines indeed is a costly proposition.

The estimated cost in 1989 dollars to provide passenger service on the Middleborough, Plymouth and Greenbush lines is $562 million.

Partial funding is in place — nearly $391.7 million. And, the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority would use its authority to bond about $196 million as the local share.

Since the project was first designed, costs have accelerated, and an additional $170 million must be financed.

And there are some other costs not factored into the $562 million pricetag — the cost of removing contaminated materials or soils along the rights of way, acquiring needed land and litigation costs associated with any landtakings.

In a footnote of the voluminous environmental impact study/report prepared by Sverdrup Corp. at a cost of $12 million, the cost of land acquisitions at as yet-to-be-designated park-and-ride lots is unknown.either.

So, the obvious question is why would we taxpayers want to invest this kind of money in such a costly project. The key word is invest.

Back in the late 1950s, when the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad was seeking a relatively small state subsidy to shore up its finances in providing passenger service, the legislature said no.

And, government officials turned their noses in the air at a state-of-the-art proposition to run a monorail along the Old Colony roadbeds.

And, it was going to be privately funded!

It is now 31 years later.

All the communities in the Old Colony Railroad service area have grown in population even without trains.

Commentary

But as the economy has changed, more and more residents need transportation to reach their jobs which are farther and farther away from their homes.

Carpooling and buses — and commuter boats for coastal residents — are all viable options as more and more cars clog the roads into Boston.

The MBTA and the state subsidize some of the transportation alternatives now and would continue to do so under the proposed railroad revitalization plan.

But the trains would provide clean, convenient transportation to hundreds of commuters — traveling either to Boston or to businesses to the south and southwest of the capital.

The project itself would create 5100 jobs in construction and in related industries.

But once it was built, it would attract new businesses to the region and build a broadened tax base now so heavily dependent on residential real estate.

Trains often evoke romantic images of days gone by, but restoration of the Old Colony Railroad's three lines is an old idea that has lingered for three decades. It's time it is dusted off and given support.

Time and Oil

Boy did I feel threatened this week when Sudam Hussein invaded Kuwait. It wasn't because he toppled a government – he'd been attempting that for eight years in Iran, or that he has been compared to Hitler, or that he has a deadly arsenal of chemical and nuclear weapons. No m'am and no sir. I felt threatened because he was messing with the intricately woven fabric of my lifestyle. He was going for my jugular vein, and it contained OIL.

I suppose you think it's selfish of me to say that. I have never lived through a war on my soil. I am so protected from the volatile nature of the Middle East where its people seem as combustible as its most exportable product. You have to understand...I am hooked on oil. I am of the first generation with a car in every garage. Now we all have three or four. I grew up in the Disposable Generation where throw away products replaced reusable ones, entirely reversing my parents' Depression and war-effort ethics. I am so protected from oil production and yet so dependent on oil consumption.

Growing up in the Disposable Generation has led me to think, act, and feel disposable. The most subtle and insidious aspect of disposable has been on my value system. Words like "disposable friends," or "toxic relationships" seem to creep into conversations.

Oil-fed motorized travel has opened up the globe to us at the sake of closing off the neighborhood and family. We orient our new houses towards the garage instead of the hearth. We have uprooted our families for the next corporate move around the planet, where we choose our communities by their similarities instead of their uniqueness.

Even our fellow human beings are little more than a petroleum based MacDonald's clamshell: After the burger has been eaten – simply throw away its container. We meet more and more people as we chase our elusive goals and yet we forget to have an evening meal with our family ("I'll catch a bite to eat on the way home"). We don't know our neighbors because we don't walk in our neighborhoods.

"A good story takes time to tell," a friend once told me. The particular story that he was telling took five hours, 34 minutes and 45 seconds to tell. I had never sat that long in my entire life. I was spellbound. I had never heard a story told with so many nuances and asides. It was a culture shock for me. I found myself afterwards measuring what else I could have done in that time. I could have traveled from the East to West coasts. I could have flown from Boston to Washington, D.C., had a meeting and flown back to Boston. Why, I could have mashed all the instant mashed potatoes in the entire world in that time. Instead, I listened. It was such a luxury for me to take the time to listen. It was the gift of a story, and a story well told can last a lifetime.

As prices climb and as world tensions mount, I'll be looking hard at my oil driven life. Taking mass transportation here, carpooling there. I'll be looking forward to the people I will meet on the commute and the newspaper I'll get to read. I'll be walking more; I'm considering buying a solar car for my short commutes. I'll be finishing up the insulating I didn't get to when the fuel prices dipped. But most of all I'll be looking at the way I spend my time. If I move around less, I would have more time with each person. I would have more time with my family. Gosh, maybe I'd even learn how to boil a potato instead of using the microwave ones.

TROUBLESHOOTING AT THE RTF

Containers: glass, tin cans and plastic jugs (made of resin #1 or #2).

These items are all part of the Mandatory Recycling Program here in Cohasset, and yet when Dr. Joseph Godzik, our Health Agent, inspects our trash he is finding a lot of these items. These items are simple to prepare and to separate at home.

Here are some tips:

1. Clean all food out of containers (solids like peanut butter are easily cleaned with a plastic spatula).

2. Wash containers with your regular dishes. Cans and jars can simply be placed in dishwasher or if you hand wash, simply rinse these out last. Milk jugs and beer bottles, etc. can be rinsed with just a "swish" (2 tablespoons) of water.

3. Place in separate paper bag than regular trash, but conveniently located so you'll use it all the time.

Mihos makes local schools top priority

Christy Mihos, Republican candidate for the Plymouth/Norfolk Senatorial seat vacated by Senator William Golden (D), said while the state legislature appears to be moving in the right direction, there are problems.

"A 4% across-the-board cut of discretionary accounts without specific, detailed reduction breakdowns will allow the governor to make 'spite cuts' in local aid, funds to state schools, and human resources," Mihos said.

Mihos said his senatorial campaign thrust is to provide an effective governmental delivery system at a reasonable cost; to make cities and towns and their schools a top priority of Beacon Hill.

Candidates

According to Mihos, the CLT petition is more of a "bargaining tool" than a final solution.

"Taxpayers had to find a way to make Beacon Hill listen, and it appears they've been successful. One thing is clear, we're not going to correct the misappropriations of four years in January 1991," Mihos said. Whether Beacon Hill borrows to cover the 1990 deficit or cuts from discretionary accounts to recoop those funds, taxpayers are going to have to bite the bullet.

"If voters elect the right managers this year, the business leaders of this state can 'jump start' the economy through meaningful investment tax credits, capital gains reduction, and privatizing."

START AT THE BOTTOM

If the foundation of a house is uneven, the floors and walls above it are bound to be out of kilter as well. The floors and walls may have to undergo lengthening and shortening to compensate for the imbalance. The same may be said for the feet and their relation to the rest of the body. If the feet experience a problem, nerve endings located on the bottom of the feet will relay the information to the rest of the body's structure. Thus, a foot injury is likely to have repercussions throughout the legs, back, and shoulders. They may experience strain due to irregular compensatory actions. The way to correct these improper motions is to get to the bottom of the problem. By focusing on the feet, the chiropractor may have a good chance at setting the rest of the body straight.

Chiropractic offers a natural, knifeless and drugless approach to your discomfort and problems. Let DR. DEBRA M. TRANBERG, SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, 80 Front St., Scituate, 545-7388, and DR. SUSAN EMMER, CHIROPRACTIC & FAMILY WELLNESS CARE, 87 Sohier St., Cohasset, 383-1330, have the opportunity to assess your needs and suggest the chiropractic applications that will provide a natural healing process to take place throughout your body. By appointment. Workers Comp. cases and most insurance plans accepted.

P.S. The formation of foot calluses may indicate that the feet are bearing weight improperly.

Charity tennis event raises $3,500 for Children's Hospital

By David McKee
Mariner staff

More than $3,500 was raised for the AIDS Discretionary Fund at the Children's Hospital in a benefit mixed doubles tennis tournament held on Aug. 4 and 5 in Cohasset.

The field of 52 teams was whittled down over the two day competition on various private courts in Cohasset until the team of John and Betty Voikas of Scituate was left standing.

They defeated the brother and sister team of Cohasset's Brian Hill and Elizabeth McLaughlin in the final match.

John Voikas is a teaching pro who is based at the Mill Pond Club in Hanover.

In addition there was a consolation tournament for those teams that lost in the first round.

The consolation round was won by the team of Cohasset's Kurt and Candy Smalzell.

They defeated the team of Lynn Palmeter and Donald Zerendon.

"John and Betty Voikas personified the spirit and the type of people who competed in this charity event," co-chairman Bob Whelan said. "It was a great tournament and everyone had a great time playing tennis and raising money for a very worthy cause."

Whelan and co-chairman Joy Pratt helped get the Cohasset Benefit Tennis Tournament for the Children's Hospital off the ground after a ten-year hiatus. The tournament was originally hosted by Jessie Fox.

"We were getting the tournament going from inertia and with the response we got and the money we raised, I am very pleased," Whelan said. "Our goal is to have the tournament every year and get it established and have it get bigger and bigger each year. This year we did not set out to break the bank, instead we focused on providing a good weekend of tennis and some fun. And I think we accomplished that."

Whelan said that there will be an open account for the tournament that will go towards making it an annual event. Contributions are still being accepted and can be made out to the Cohasset Benefit 1990, 136 Atlantic Ave. Cohasset 02025.

"It was a very competitive tournament, there was some fine tennis played and already we are planning next year's event," Whelan said.

The weather for the tournament was according to Pratt, "just fabulous. It was hot but there was no rain and we were able to get in every match."

There were six rounds all together in the tournament. The regular tournament was a best of three set format while the consolation tournament was a ten game pro set.

Each team paid an $85 entry fee and contributions were solicited from local residents and corporate sponsors.

Gift certificates were raffled off at the awards dinner and the top finishers each received a Silver bowl for their efforts.

The end of the tourney was celebrated with an open party at the Cohasset Sailing Club for all the participants.

In addition to the work of Whelan and Pratt, the co-chairman, the work of committee members Mia Graham, John Davey, Kristin Ralff, Joe Whelan and Annie Abbruzzese were praised.

"There are many people who deserve credit for getting this event off the ground," Rob Whelan said. "It was a group effort."

The money raised from the tournament, which will be held the first weekend in August in each following year, goes to a very worthy cause, the AIDS Discretionary Fund at the Children's Hospital.

"We knew the money would be going to the Children's Hospital but there were so many worthy areas," Whelan said. "But Mia Graham, who is a nurse from Cohasset said explained about the AIDS Discretionary Fund. After we listened to her research, we decided to put our funds into that. It is money that will be put to good use."

Cohasset Cardinals qualify for playoffs

Cohasset's nine-year-old summer team, the Cardinals, entered the last week of the season needing two victories in three games to qualify for the Suburban Youth Baseball League playoffs. The team, sponsored by the Mass 4 x 4 Association, soundly defeated both Holbrook and Hingham and will meet Division II champion Dedham in the opening round of the playoffs on Tuesday, Aug. 7, at Dedham. Only eight of the nineteen teams in the league qualified for the playoffs. Cohasset finds itself in the company of traditional baseball powers Braintree, Dedham, Needham, and Westwood. The other qualifying teams are Canton, Duxbury, and Medway. The winner of the Cohasset - Dedham game will meet either Braintree American or Needham in a night game to be held under the lights in Westwood on Thursday, Aug. 9, at 7:45 p.m. The championship game will also be decided in Westwood on Saturday, August 11, at 10 a.m.

COHASSET 12 - HOLBROOK 6

On a night when Holbrook pitchers allowed just five walks and permitted only two of those five to be converted into runs, Cohasset needed hitting and they got it. Justin Golden bated three times and hit for an "almost cycle" with a single, double and triple. Greg Taylor was double trouble for Holbrook. He doubled in the second to drive in two runs and he led off the sixth with a double to begin a four-run rally that provided Cohasset with badly needed insurance runs Ben Smoot also had two hits.

Smoot got Cohasset's defense off to an excellent start after Holbrook's first batter fouled off a Greg Taylor fast ball. "The Cat" demonstrated his catlike moves by twisting over backwards and diving for the ball to secure the out. Michael "Magnet Man" Rossi attracted the next two ground balls his way and dispatched two more Holbrook batters with quick throws to first base.

Kevin "Bulldog" DeVito threw out Holbrook's leadoff batter in the second inning by smoothly handling a sharply hit ground ball to the "hot corner." Cohasset continued to play near-perfect defense behind the pitching of Greg Taylor, Denis Rooney, and Alex Schwerin. Schwerin, "The Ironman," got stronger the more he pitched. He closed the game by striking out the sides in the last inning.

The Holbrook game marked the welcome return of Jamie "Range Rover" DeMichele to the cohasset lineup. DeMichele carries a big bat and roams center field with quiet concentration and a sure hand.

DUXBURY 11 - COHASSET 2

Duxbury pitchers threw a five-hitter against Cohasset last Wednesday. Greg Taylor accounted for two of the hits with a single and a double in three trips to the plate. Jim O'Sullivan, Eric Hanian, and Justin Golden also had hits.

Cohasset's defense give up seven runs in the first inning, three in the second, and one in the third before shutting down Duxbury's potent attack. This game marked only the second time that a team broke into double digits against Cohasset. Earlier in the season, Braintree National scored twelve in a losing effort against the Cardinals.

COHASSET 18 - HINGHAM 7

This last game of the regular season belonged to Cohasset from beginning to end. In the blistering 98 degree heat, the Cardinals scored nine in the first, six in the second and three in the fourth. The Cardinals put the game out of reach for Hingham in the second inning when Ben Smoot doubled with the bases loaded. Jeff "The Bat Man" Flanagan and Kevin DeVito followed with doubles of their own. Jim "The Stingray" O'Sullivan had a perfect day at bat with two hits and two walks in four trips to the plate. He ends the regular season batting .464.

The Cardinals maintained their concentration in the field in spite of the intense heat and played flawlessly behind the pitching of Greg Taylor and Jim O'Sullivan. Taylor has pitched in every game but one for the Cardinals. His durability and strength have been an invaluable asset to the team.

PLAYER PROFILES

Ben Roine — Ben plays left field for the Cardinals. He is quick and plays hard. His on-base percentage after 10 games is .833. He bats left and throws right.

Justin Golden — Justin plays shortstop and pitcher for the Cardinals. This tough competitor hits and fields well. He bats right and throws right.

Ben Smoot — Ben is the Cardinals' catcher. He has great agility and a rocket arm. He bats right and throws right.

Steve Kovach — Steve plays both infield and outfield for the Cardinals. He is quick with the bat and plays the game with intensity. He bats right and throws right.

Singer offers varied set list

On Sunday, Aug. 12, from 6 to 7 p.m., David Caldwell will perform on the newly refurbished 57-bell carillon at St. Stephen's Church.

Caldwell, formerly the carilloneur at the University of Rochester, is currently the carilloneur for the town of Norwood. His concert will include a mixture of baroque music, American tunes, folk tunes, and modern pieces.

Bring a picnic supper and folding chairs or a blanket to the Cohasset Common.

Another fine place to listen is the brick courtyard at Stagecoach Way, between the Aegean Fare restaurant and Colpitts Travel. The concert is free and open to the public.

Society will cruise coast

The Cohasset Historical Society will sponsor a short historical ocean cruise on Sunday, August 19, to view three historical lighthouses in Boston Bay. It will be a short ocean cruise to view Boston Light, Graves Lighthouse and Minot's Ledge Light, as well as to see the famed coastline of Cohasset from the ocean side. The Society will provide historical commentary during the trip. Charted specially for the occasion is the 150 passenger commuter and cruise vessel Gracious Lady on the Massachusetts Bay Line. For this special tour picnic lunches may be brought aboard the vessel, and there will be soft drinks and other beverages sold aboard ship.

The Society's cruise aboard Gracious Lady will leave from the Harbor Island Cruise facility at the former Hingham shipyard at noon and is scheduled to return there at 3 p.m.

Reservations for the boat tour may be made by sending a check to the Cohasset Historical Society at 14 Summer Street, Cohasset MA 02025. Cost is $25 for members, $30 for non-members. Advance reservations are a must since the capacity of the vessel is limited.

Of the three Boston Bay lighthouses, Boston Light is the nation's oldest, Minot's Ledge one of the most difficult of access and most unique in its construction, and Graves is one of the newest lighthouses of our coastline. Each has a unique history, which will be touched upon by the Historical Society during its forthcoming tour. For further information about the short ocean cruise please call the Society at 383-6930, mornings.

Yacht club to hold dance

Cohasset Yacht Club is sponsoring a junior dance from 7:30 to 10:30 p.m. Friday, Aug. 17, at the club.

Jay Fiore will be the DJ. Refreshments are included in the $5 ticket price.

Crack down on Route 3A hits business

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

The planning board and zoning board of appeals have been cracking down on businesses on Route 3A. The town is enforcing rules about signs, outdoor displays of merchandise and appropriate tenants.

Shirley Musto, owner of Inspirations Boutique, lost an appeal of a zoning board order. Musto can no longer display merchandise outdoors.

CVS must comply with limitations on the size, color and placement of signs in their new location in the renovated Tedeschi's Plaza.

And two businesses have been forced off Route 3A and out of town because of action taken against them by the two boards.

Queen Ann News, the regional distributor for the Boston Globe newspaper, and The Master Herbalist have been evicted from their quarters in Jonathan Livingston Plaza.

The zoning board upheld a ruling that distribution and warehousing businesses were not permitted uses in the highway business district. Both businesses were denied variances that would have allowed them to continue doing business on Route 3A

Both businesses rented lower level, rear entrance space in the older section of the shopping center. None of the abutters or other neighbors had any

State puts a brake on Old Colony RR line

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

Citing a "lack of sufficient detail and clarity regarding noise and vibration impact/mitigation" Environmental Affairs Secretary John DeVillars is calling for a more complete review of alternatives to the Old Colony Rail restoration.

In an eight-page certificate of action issued Aug. 11, DeVillars called on the MBTA to furnish a better assessment of impacts before issuing a final draft statement.

If he is not satisfied with the MBTA's response, DeVillars has the power to stop the entire plan dead in its tracks.

"My general criticism of the document relates to its relatively limited treatment of state regulatory programs and policies for wetland and water control issues, to the lack of sufficient detail and clarity regarding noise and vibration (impacts and mitigation) especially in Hingham and to its controversial assumptions regarding the allocated parking at several station sites," DeVillars wrote.

"I suggest that (the final draft report) evaluate additional alternatives for the Greenbush communities and I recognize the potential for supplemental documentation relating to the Greenbush Line should the Final Draft Environmental Impact Statement/Report be unsuccessful at reaching closure on Hingham related concerns."

Stephen Polechronis, the project manager for the $561 million restoration, said he was pleased that DeVillars found most of the Draft Environmental Impact Report acceptable.

Polechronis denied that the certificate signaled the end of the plan to run the rail through Hingham Square.

"I don't think it means that at all," he said, "it is consistent with the work we have been doing."

He maintained that the MBTA has made every effort to "minimize any impacts" and that DeVillars request is "completely" in line with previous work.

He reiterated that the MBTA still considers all three lines to be a single project and that work would not begin on the less-controversial Plymouth and Middleborough Lines independent of the hotly debated Greenbush Line.

Hingham Historical Commission Chairman Alexander Macmillan differed with Polechronis and called the certificate of action a "victory" for the town.

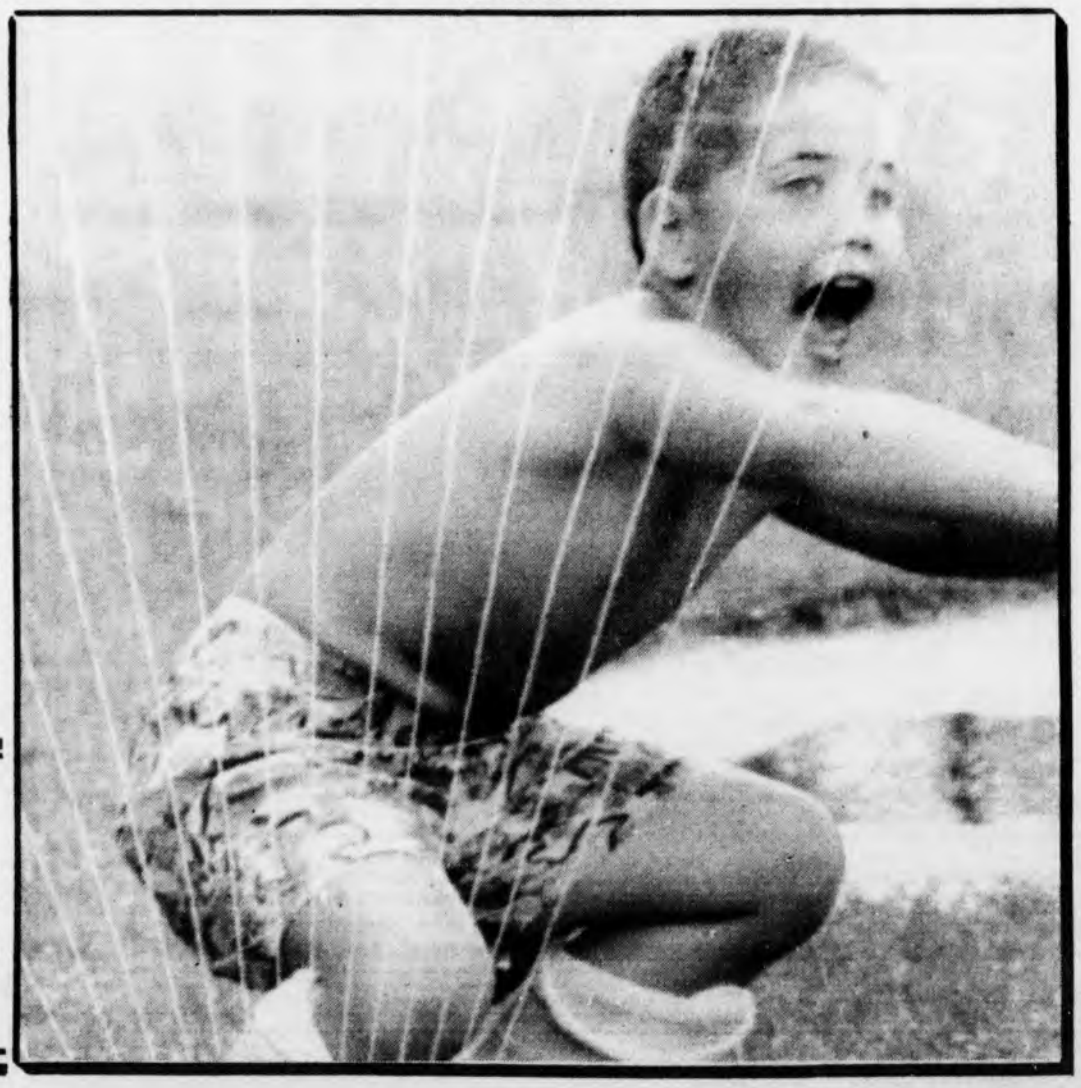
"He (DeVillars) acknowledged the validity, almost across the board, of the concerns raised in the response filed by the town of Hingham," Macmillan said.

"DeVillars quoted and cited portions of the response directly and directed the MBTA to respond and go back to the drawing board on the Greenbush line.

"He reiterated all of the concerns we expressed and to that extent we are quite pleased."

Macmillan said his biggest concern is that the MBTA will "take it seriously" and not just "dust off the old proposals."

He feels at the very least, however, DeVillars has given the MBTA "a lot of homework"



Richard Cook of the Hingham planning board was not as pleased with DeVillars' issuance.

Although he said he agrees for the most part with Macmillan, he admitted he was troubled by the polite, non-forceful tone of the certificate.

Cohasset's week

WWI tablet to be restored

Seventy years ago, Cohasset put up a temporary marker to honor residents who gave their lives in World War I. The town never got around to installing a permanent memorial, and now the temporary marker is showing the ravages of time and weather.

The Sons of the American Legion recently got permission from the selectmen to take off the glass cover, scrape and repaint the tablet, restore the names that have faded away and reseal the honor roll when they are done.

The group also promised to solicit approval from other boards controlling the common and historical markers before beginning work.

"I won't drive a nail on that common until I go through Noel Ripley and the other boards," Tom Wigmore of the Sons of the American Legion promised.

Tree & Parks equipment

Tree and parks superintendent Peter Laugelle will be able to maintain town property in fine style once he repairs a broken mower and replace two chain saws and a weed whacker.

Laugelle appeared before selectmen seeking a transfer of funds for the equipment.

Selectmen authorized transfer of $1,440 from the reserve fund to purchase the chain saws and weed whacker. He was told he could pay the $600 repair bill out of his budget.

The play's the thing

Selectmen gave the Dramatic Club permission to use the town hall auditorium either the first or second weekend in March for a play performance.

Dramatic Club member Joanne Nawn told selectmen the group plans to present the play, "Eleemosynary."

Although no information was given about the theme of the play, the title is drawn from a Greek word meaning charity or alms.

Committees get members

Selectmen gave several committees an infusion of new members or reappointed experienced members for a new term at their Aug. 6 meeting.

Selectmen appointed Michele Buckley, Ronald M. Campbell, David Chittim, Pamela Johansen, Deborah Richards and John Zotos to the new Commission on the Handicapped.

Chittim was also appointed to the Council on Aging.

The reactivated Straits Pond Committee now includes Harvey Kurtzman and Merle Graham.

Barbara Dillon was reappointed to the Historical Commission and Edward Lubitz was reappointed as an associate member of the Zoning Board of Appeals.

Non-profits lose breaks

When selectmen waived the building permit fee for the addition to the Second Congregational Church, they opened a can of worms. They cured the problem by instituting a new policy, effective August 7, that no waivers of town fees will be granted to non-profit organizations.

"We've gotten calls from people objecting to selectmen waiving fees for non-profits," selectmen explained.

Many of the objections centered on the fact that the town provides services to the non-profit organizations, but doesn't receive any taxes to offset the cost of those services. Callers objected to giving them yet another break.

Selectmen Jane Goedecke defended the no-waiver policy.

"I just don't think we have a choice in these times of scarce resources," she said.

Oil spill in harbor

Some time in the past month, someone dumped two five-gallon containers of oil into a dumpster at Government Island. That little trip to the dumpster cost the town a pretty penny — and could have been far worse, according to executive secretary Greg Doyon.

The oil leaked out of the dumpster and found its way into the harbor and the Gulf River.

The harbor master, water department personnel, fire department and the state department of environmental protection responded to the environmentally hazardous spill promptly. Their quick response was made easier by having the proper supplies on hand, Doyon said. As a result, the hazardous waste spill was cleaned up quickly at a cost of $700.

Doyon said it would have cost the unknown dumper a maximum of $2.50 to dispose of the oil at the recycling transfer facility. With a valid RTF sticker, disposal would have been free.

"This was a rather expensive little incident," Doyon said.

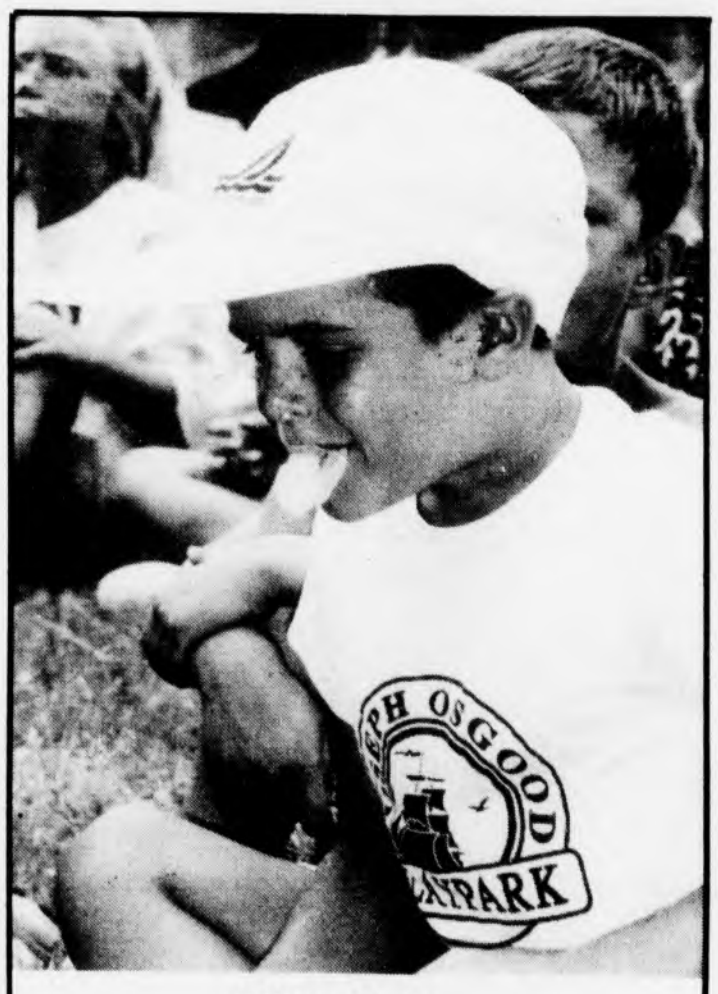
Cohasset's week

Circus: Too loud, too late



Selectman Martha Gjesteby recently registered her dismay at the decibel level and hours of a recent Wednesday night performance at the South Shore Music Circus.

"I heard it all," Gjesteby said. "They rehearsed from 4 p.m. to 5 p.m. and the program ran until 11:30 p.m." Gjesteby's home is on Old Pasture Road.

"This was a weekday night. I, myself, complained to the police several times," Gjesteby continued. "It is difficult for people who are sleeping and have to go to work early the next day." Gjesteby wants the town to enforce agreements about the performance hours at the Music Circus.

She also raised a complaint about a leaflet suggesting people attending a political fundraiser at the Music Circus could park in the Joseph Osgood School parking lot.

Gjesteby said it makes it difficult on residents wanting to take their children to the playpark. Concerns about liability and lack of permission from school officials were also cited.

William Moody

Lily Pond land taken

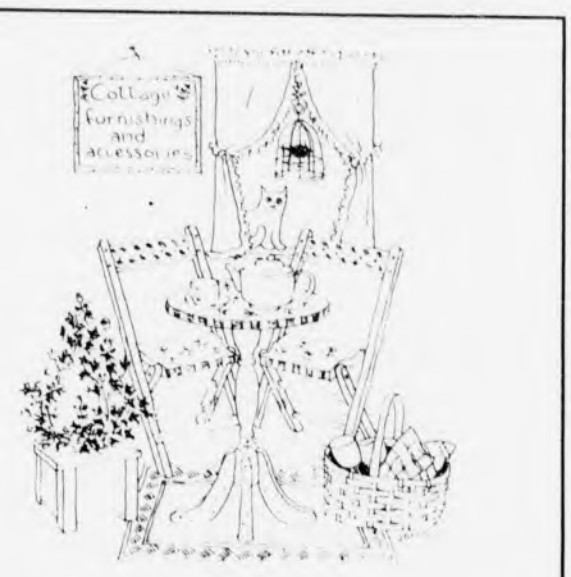
The Lily Pond Estates land will belong to the town soon. Selectmen signed an official order of taking by eminent domain Aug. 6.

Residents voted at town meeting to spend $1.9 million to acquire the 32-acre parcel to protect the town water supply. The acquisition is considered a friendly taking because owner Edward Britt agreed to sell the land.

Britt originally planned to construct homes on the land that directly abuts the town reservoir.

Town hall changes made

Selectmen gave the conservation commission permission to close their office to public transactions one-half-day per week in order to process paperwork undisturbed.



The commission had sought permission to close two afternoons each week, but selectmen said that would be too confusing for the public and too burdensome on the switchboard workers. They approved the compromise proposal on a trial basis.

Chairman Rocco Laugelle was not thrilled with the request coming so close on the heels of a decision to close the treasurer-collector's announcement that her office would be closed every Wednesday.

"You're going to get a request from every department," he warned.

Selectman Jane Goedecke said this situation was different from the treasurer-collector's.
Goedecke said the treasurer-collector's office was the only one to lose staff positions and not have them restored later.

Health board seeks septic repairs

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

If the board of health has their way, the selectmen will finally fix the failing septic system out at Government Island after dragging their feet for four or five months.

According to Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik, the residential duplex at Government Island is served by a cesspool. Godzik said sewage is breaking out onto the surface and contaminating the wetland area. Pumping the cesspool will not correct the problem, he said.

According to the letter the board of health sent the selectmen, they have 30 days to begin making the repairs. The board of health threatened to order the eviction of the tenants in the town-owned duplex if the selectmen failed to comply with the order.

Selectmen originally planned to make the repairs five months ago, but were stymied when the advisory committee refused to transfer the funds for the job. The selectmen had requested $6,000 from the reserve fund.

The advisory committee denied the original request saying the town should not be in the landlord business. The committee suggested the town sell the duplex because it can't afford the maintenance and repair costs.

When the advisory committee denied their request, the selectmen set up a subcommittee to decide what to do about the duplex. The subcommittee, consisting of Chairman Rocco Laugelle and Diana Kornet, told the board that no matter what the town decided to do with the property, the septic system needed to be repaired. The board agreed to go forward with the repairs even before receiving the health board's order.

"We want the advisory committee to have a meeting so we can talk to them about Government Island," Kornet said Monday. "We need to ask them if they will please approve the transfer.

"It is our responsibility to decide policy about town buildings," she added. "It is not their decision to make."

Advisory committee Chairman Ray Kasperowicz said the committee does not hold regularly scheduled meetings in the summer. He wasn't sympathetic to a second reserve fund transfer request.

"I told the board of health, and Mike Sullivan and Bill Baird specifically, that it would seem to me the Police hiring process set

Vacancies in the police department now will be filled from a list of South Shore police officers laid off due to budget cutbacks.

"These people have all gone through the police academy and don't need any training," selectman Martha Gjesteby said.

Chairman Rocco Laugelle cast the only vote against using the regional list, saying he preferred a local preference. He said he was concerned that Cohasset will foot the bill for training and then lose them to their home communities.

Selectmen also announced that two patrolmen were on the list for promotion to sergeant.

Richard Abbadessa and Lawrence Ainslie both passed the examination and are fully qualified for promotion to an anticipated vacancy due to retirement.

Crackdown on businesses

complaints. Queen Ann News rented space from Cummings for five years. Prior to that, the business rented space for five years in the lower level of the Brigantine building next door.

Thomas Cummings, owner of the center, has evicted both businesses.

A third business renting space from Cummings also was under fire. The boards also sought to remove Hassan Woodcarving & Sign Company. They were able to qualify under the category "miscellaneous trade shop" because they conducted both retail and manufacturing business on the premises.

Queen Ann News moves to new quarters in Norwell Aug. 30. According to Anthony Cappello, the business didn't look for alternative sites in Cohasset. Cappello took the forced move philosophically.

George Muir, owner of The Master Herbalist, was not philosophical. He felt his business had been unfairly singled out.

"Only certain businesses are told to move," he said. "Has Autohaus moved yet?"

Muir believes the two boards don't want anything but retail businesses in town.

"There really is no other place," he said.

Cummings also believes the boards discriminated against his tenants.

"It was a classic example of when a board of appeals should have granted a variance and didn't," he said. "There was no opposition at all. Even the board members recognized that. It defies any rational explanation."

Cummings said one of the reasons cited in the decision denying the variance to Queen Ann News had nothing to do with the distributor. It cited Cummings' status as a "flagrant zoning bylaw violator."

That mystifies Cummings. He said he has never been hauled before either board for zoning violations. He also said he complied with every regulation and procedure when he enlarged and renovated the plaza.

The only explanation he could find was the boards' displeasure at his attempt to use the basement space in the new building in the plaza.

Cummings said he will have difficulty finding replacement tenants. The space is not visible from the highway, it's located in the lower level of the building and the only access is from the rear of the building. It is hardly desirable as retail space.

Cummings also believes the action was counterproductive for the cash-starved town.

"By removing those tenants, it substantially reduced the value of my property," Cummings said. "The more rent I can get, the more the building is assessed."

Railroad plan wins further study town could transfer funds from the town building maintenance fund," he said.

Tenant Pamela Souther isn't experiencing any problem with the septic system. She said her toilet is flushing, the tub is draining and there is no backup or odor in the apartment.

Souther has lived in the duplex for 22 years. Her biggest concern is the lack of water pressure.

"When they use the water next door, we have no water here," she said. "If the fishermen or the sailing club turn on a faucet, we have no water."

Despite her water problems, the selectmen have complained publicly about the size of the water bills at the duplex. If the bills are high, Souther says, there has to be a leak somewhere because she sure isn't swimming in water.

"The thing that irritates me is there is no communication from the selectmen," she said. "Nobody bothers to come up and talk to us about what is going on."

She thinks it is unfair that the board of health would penalize the tenants if the town doesn't take some action.

Souther said the biggest problem at the duplex is the failure of the town to take care of the building. In the past eight or nine years, little maintenance has been done on the property. Souther said if the town spent just a portion of the $1,200 they get in rent each month making repairs they wouldn't have these problems.

Despite a town requirement that septic systems be pumped out every two years at a minimum, Souther has not seen a septic pumping truck come to the duplex in years.

She hopes the town will take care of the problem so she doesn't need to worry about where she will be living in 30 days.

"This is my home and I love it," she said. "I've kept this place up all these years."

WHO IS THE COUNCIL ON AGING?

The Council on Aging is a municipal organization of nine volunteer members appointed by the board of selectmen to serve as advocates for the town elderly, age 60 (sixty) and over. The Council on Aging (COA) provides services designed to improve the quality of life of elders by assisting them to remain as physically mobile, mentally alert and socially active as possible. The COA employs a director and an outreach worker along with a senior aide, provided by South Shore Elder Affairs, Boston. All the staff is here to help you when you need it even if it's a simple question, call us. That is why we are here — to serve you!

IT'S TIME FOR CONGRESS TO PASS THE PEPPER

On March 2, the Pepper Commission released its recommendations to congress for how we can best provide long term care to the disabled and guaranteed access to health care for every American. The Pepper Commission (officially the Bi-Partisan Commission on Comprehensive Health Care) was established by the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act.

The commission's recommendation for long term care includes a new public program to provide home and community based care to the severely disabled, regardless of age, and coverage of the first three months of nursing home care.

The ensure universal access to basic care, the commission proposes expansion of workplace-based health insurance and establishment of a public program to offer health care to those not covered through their jobs.

The commission's task — developing a package of proposals capable of winning broad bi-partisan support — was not an easy one. Ultimately, the long term care provisions were adopted by a vote of 11-4; the access provision, by 807.

If you support this effort, please call the Council on Aging at 383-9112 for information on how to get behind the Pepper Commission plan and get it moving along in congress. Remember, it's time to pass the pepper!

NEW FROM SHINE

Planning for retirement organized by Pat Ryan. While retirement may seem a long way off, failure to plan for it now may result in serious cash shortfalls during your retirement years. Here's a five-week workshop planned for you! Ask yourself these simple questions: Do I have the right resources to retire? Do I have the proper insurance? Do I know how to keep this lifestyle? What about my life after retirement — what will I do?

The word "retirement" actually means "a new beginning." Planning is the most important factor in achieving satisfaction and security in your later years. This series will help you explore some of the goals, questions and concerns you might have for your retirement and help you on the road to a new beginning.

The program is planned for every Thursday evening in November from 7 to 9 p.m. at the Trinitarian Church, Country Way, Scituate. To enroll, please call the council office at 383-9112 and ask for Pay Ryan.

Tower's maps are now available

By David Wadsworth
Special to the Mariner

The late Gilbert S. Tower, a lifelong Cohasset resident and devoted town historian, produced a set of eight large sketch-maps of various parts of Cohasset upon which he compiled large amounts of historical information.

Using official town records, old maps, county atlases and records of the Historical Society Mr. Tower, by profession a navel architect, created an exhaustive compilation of information about the town and its people. His map project, begun in the 1940s and continued for some two decades, can be described as the largest single source of pictorial information relating to Cohasset's unique history. The Tower sketchmaps, replete with historical and geographical information, represent a "labor of love" by a man devoted to the community in which he had been born and resided for nearly a century.

In the historical maps of Cohasset the oldest houses are shown, and in some cases short biographies of their builders are given. More modern information is given as well, showing the early postwar developments of the latter 1940s and the 50s, as are the Victorian "cottages" of the latter 19th century Cohasset shoreline roads. In most cases lists of owners are given, as far as they were known to the mapmaker. The early days of the town as a fishing and mercantile center are shown in detail, and the locations of early school houses and fire stations are given. Development of earliest highways and public lands is depicted. Altogether there are eight historical maps in the series covering the following areas of the town: (1) The Cove, Cohasset Harbor and "Big Square" around Jacob's Meadow; (2) The East End of Atlantic Avenue and Whitehead area; (3) Sandy Cove, Beach Street and the "Great Neck" area; (4) Around the Common and the Inner Part of Little Harbor; (5) Nichols Road, Sandy Beach and around the shores of Little Harbor, (6) Jerusalem Road from Bow Street to Forest Avenue; (7) Jerusalem Road from Forest Avenue to West Corner, and (8) the "Old Part" of King Street.

In the historical sketchmaps the historical information extends as far back in time as the first "marsh and meadow grants" made at Conahasset by the town of Hingham in the years 1636 to about 1660, and the Land Division of the Conahasset Uplands made in 1670. At that time Cohasset was the east part of Hingham and its land was portioned out among Hingham landowners by vote of the town in that year. The first homesteads and farms appeared soon after, and by 1700 shipbuilding was taking place at our harbor, called "Shipcove." After 1700 the small community at Cohasset grew to become a center of agriculture and maritime activity that reached its peak in the mid-19th century. In 1770 Cohasset was finally separated from its parent town of Hingham, and at the end of its maritime era in the latter 19th century became a summer colony famed for its summer shoreside "cottages." Twentieth century developments have made the old New England village a suburb of the nearby city. Tower's historical maps together depict more than 350 years of the history of this New England community. The mapmaker's lifetime of 99 years itself spanned nearly half of Cohasset's history as a separate town, starting during the time of the 19th century mackerel schooners and finishing in a very different era in which town and nation strove to solve the newer problems of the latter 20th century.

As a naval architect Mr. Tower had helped design the ships that won World War 2, and earlier he had been an engineer on the construction of the Panama Canal. His keen powers of observation and meticulous attention to documented historical detail have provided, in his maps, a unique wealth of information about Cohasset's past.

By special arrangement with his daughter Mrs. Frances Tower Maroni the Cohasset Historical Society has reprinted Gilbert S. Tower's historical maps of Cohasset. They are available individually or as a set at the Society's museum shop located at its summer museum, the Capt. John Wilson Historical House, Elm Street, Cohasset center. The Capt. John Wilson House is open each afternoon except Mondays, from 1:30 to 4:30, through Sep. 30.

Science Center wins grant

The South Shore Natural Science Center, Norwell, recently received a $36,594 grant from the Institute of Museum Services. The Center was one of 390 institutions chosen from 1,368 applications nationwide.

The national grant will supplement the Center's operating budget and be used for such necessities as staff salaries, opening the doors, and turning on the lights.

The Science Center's Acting Executive Director, Cathy Bush of Duxbury, accepted the award from First Lady Barbara Bush, who hosted a reception on the White House's South Lawn in honor of this year's award recipients.

STRAIGHTENING OUT SOME MATTERS

From the time we are children, we are told by our parents to "stand up straight". The obvious reason for this admonition is that good posture makes a person look better. As we grow older, the benefits of good posture are more obvious. Good posture brings vitality and a youthful appearance to sagging bodies. Improved posture not only makes older women appear taller and thinner, but it also brings a 50 percent reduction to the sag of the bustline. More importantly, improved posture helps the lungs realize their full intake capacity. This means better oxygenation of the body's tissues. In addition good posture helps pull the spine back and the intestines away from a position on the pelvic floor. Regularity improves, and muscles assume their proper lengths and positions. A properly aligned spine may bring these (and other) benefits.

DR. DEBRA M. TRANBERG, SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, 80 Front St., Scituate, 545-7388, and DR. SUSAN EMMER, CHIROPRACTIC & FAMILY WELLNESS CARE, 87 Sohier St., Cohasset, 383-1330, offer the chiropractic applications that strive for proper spinal alignment and thus optimum body function. Many problems that you may experience are occupational in nature. If you are involved in the trades or are a fisherman or other types of manual labor, it may well be that the problems you are experiencing are due to the nature of the work you do. For a total state of well-being, call today. By appointment. Workers comp. cases and most insurance plans accepted.

P.S. Simple posture adjustments can bring about a 50 percent increase in head and shoulder mobility.

Around town

❑ If you have been wondering where Lisa Shumaker has been this summer, it's with good reason! Lisa is working in Washington, D.C. for the National Committee for Educational Funding. Lisa, who will be a senior at Harvard in the fall, won a grant of the Institute of Politics at Harvard, so it seems as though she will be right in her element this summer, if you don't see politics in Washington, where else? Here's hoping we get a full report from Lisa upon her return!

❑ It's that time of year for athletes, physical examinations. If any student plans on playing soccer, football or field hockey, you must have one before Monday Aug. 27. If you are unable to take advantage of the physicals at the times listed, you will need to be examined by your own physician. Boys soccer and football will be held on Thursday, Aug. 23 at 1:30 p.m. Girls' field hockey and soccer will be held on Friday, Aug. 24 at 9:15 a.m. Remember, no student will be allowed to begin practice until he/she has had a physical examination.

❑ We hope that George Orr is feeling better as he awaits his transfer from South Shore Hospital to a rehabilitation center.

❑ Two members of the Kamel family are celebrating birthdays this month, here's hoping they are grand!! Happy birthday to Chris Kamel and Jennifer Kamel.

❑ Happy birthday greetings go to Katy Whitehouse and to John Whitehouse.

❑ The Christofell family heard from Melissa last week, and all is well with her. Can you imagine getting a collect call from the USSR? It would be nice if we could set up some kind of correspondence with her, just to hear what life is like and how she is handling it all.

❑ If you have seen Jean Higgins around town lately, she is wearing a big smile! She is a grandmother, this time a boy, — Christopher James Higgins, who was born on June 25 at Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston. Christopher's parents are Robert and Judith Higgins. Congratulations go to all of you.

Joey Carbone enjoys a sliver of watermellon at the Cohasset playground program.

❑ As you may or may not know, 21 volunteers from the Second Congregational Church just returned last week for Orland, Maine, under the direction of Gary Ritts and his able adult crew. The Hancock County Service Project was deemed a success by all; they chopped wood and milled it, hauled brush, put up a fence, did finishing work on their chapel, nailed shingles, picked vegetables and built a compost bin. All this work was done in conjunction with H.O.M.E. (Homeworkers Organized for More Employment). The teen-agers that attended were Charlotte Begley, Travis Oley, Paul Ford, Matt Marks, Jon Mitchell, Erin O'Leary, Katie O'Sullivan, Katie Brennock, Penelope Dane, Maria Kierce, Nora McCarthy, Oliver Nivaud, David Poole and Jessica Pyfrom. The adults that took part were Gary Ritts, Becky Chamberlain, Rich Chamberlain, Karin Dunn, Robert Orme, Judy Ritts and Susan McFadd. The church holds a service project every year, and we take our hats off to all of the workers!!

❑ Peter Corbett graduated from North Adams State College on May 26 with a Bachelors of Arts Degree and was named to the Dean's List for the spring semester. He is the son of Paul and Eileen Corbett.

❑ Boston University awarded academic degrees to 4,669 students during commencement exercises in May.

Receiving degrees were Cohasset residents Paul G. Bishop, BS in Broadcasting and Film; James Chipman, CAGS in Endodontics; John D. Jackson, BSBA in Business Administration and Management; Melanie L. Walsh, BA in Political Science. Congratulations!

❑ Daniel Anthony Camardo has received a bachelor's degree in economics from the University of Rochester.

The student lives at 34 Windy Hill Road, Cohasset.

Oriental rugs are constantly picking up various types of soil. Some are greasy and some are gritty. But they all can eat away at your treasured possession.
For your Oriental rug to retain its beauty and value, it should be cleaned at least once every three to five years.
At Grillo Oriental Rug Cleaning, we carefully examine each rug, then give it the most suitable treatment. Sometimes that means gentle machine-washing, other times it means our 'Art-Safe' hand-washing. And our exclusive equipment and methodology enable us to remove the deep-set grit that others miss.
Furthermore, unlike harsh commercial cleaning, our individualized, museum-quality care is always safe, always effective.

New appointments dodge oath

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

According to town records, many people are conducting town business without any legal authority to do so. Although these individuals were duly appointed and have been serving on the committees and boards they were named to, they have not presented themselves to the town clerk to be sworn in.

Town Clerk Frances Marks has a long list of appointees, some with appointments dating back to July, 1989, that have yet tow take their oath of office.

Under state law, every elected member, people elected or appointed to town offices, boards or commissions "shall also, before entering upon his official duties, be sworn to the faithful performance thereof."

Actions and decisions made by boards with unsworn members are of dubious validity.

Several reminders have been sent to the delinquent appointees.

Marks said she knew of appointees who finally came to be sworn in only to find that their term of office had expired.

According to records in the Town Clerk's office, one appointee to the drainage advisory board, Lyle Branagan, has been appointed to three consecutive terms without being sworn in for any of them.

Other unsworn appointees include members of the advisory committee, capital budget committee, town government structure committee, permanent bylaw committee, the insurance advisory committee and the director of veterans' affairs and burial agent.

Taking the oath requires less than a minute's time in the Town Clerk's office. Both Marks and her assistant, Marion Douglas can give the oath of office.

Marks has no sympathy for those who complain they can't get in to take the oath. Her office is staffed at all times, she said. Office hours are 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, 8:30 a.m. to 7 p.m. Thursday and 8:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Friday.

Sewer plant changes

The sewer commissioners weren't thrilled when Metcalf & Eddy told them they were going to charge the town considerably more for the next three years of managing the sewer plant. The commissioners didn't get mad, they opted to put the contract out to bid when Metcalf & Eddy's current contract ran out July 1.

Due to delays in getting the request for bid language down pat, it was apparent there would be a gap between the end of the current contract and the signing of a new bid. The commissioners solved the problem by contracting with the Professional Services Group to manage the plant on a temporary basis.

Commissioner Henry Rattenbury estimates permanent contract will be signed, sealed and delivered on or about October 1.

Rattenbury said the plant is experiencing greater volume of wastewater than the plant was planned for, but said all sewerage is being treated appropriately.

"We are meeting our permit requirements," he said.

IT'S A FACT

Chiropractic Can Help

Chiropractors have a very special education and training in treating nerve-related health problems caused by spinal misalignment. Chiropractors find the areas along the spinal column where nerves may be "pinched" by a spinal vertebra. After finding the problem, the chiropractor manipulates the misaligned vertebra back toward normal. This restores normal nerve supply and function. The result is that the body heals itself with no drugs, surgery or continued discomfort.

Job well done

This week the summer playground program is winding up.

We want to take the occasion to give appropriate credit to the patient and creative staff of the playground program.

The program is directed by Ted Carroll, who has been involved in the program for seven years. Carroll has been director for four years now. In his other life, he's director of operations of the basketball and floor hockey programs at South Shore Sports Center in Hingham.

Lyn Pompeo directs the program for three and four year olds. A 1986 graduate of Cohasset High, she just graduated from the University of Rhode Island with a degree in speech communication. She is looking for a job.

Diana Pereria is on staff for the three and four year old program. A mother of three, she has been working with autistic and Down Syndrome children for the past five years.

Stephanie Endris is another staffer working with the three and four year olds. A 1987 graduate of Cohasset High, she is entering her senior year at Nickerson College where she is majoring in psychology, with a focus on developmental psychology.

Jennifer Endris is just finishing her first year with the three and four year olds. A 1988 graduate of Cohasset High, she is entering her junior year at Westfield State College where she is majoring in education.

Paulina Rosano is also completing her first year with the three and four year olds. A 1987 graduate of Cohasset High, she is transferring from Framingham to Bridgewater State. She is an early childhood education major.

George Umbrianna has worked in the 5 to 12 year olds program for the past three years. A 1986 graduate of Rockland High, he recently graduated from Stonehill College. He's currently looking for a job.

Mike Pinney is also completing his third year in the 5 to 12 year olds program. A 1986 graduate of Rockland High, he is a junior at Eastern Connecticutt University where he is studying child psychology.

Liz Muncey is another three-year veteran who works with the 5 to 12 year olds. A 1988 graduate of Cohasset High, she is attending Northeastern University.

David Shumaker is finishing up his second year with the 5 to 12 year olds. A 1988 graduate of Cohasset High, he is entering his sophomore year at Harvard University where he is majoring in psychology.

Liz Leary is another two-time winner with the playground program in working with the 5 to 12 year olds. Another 1988 graduate of Cohasset High, she is entering her junior year at Catholic University in Washington, D.C., where she majors in elementary education.

Erin Monaghan is completing her second year with the 5 to 12 year olds. A 1989 graduate of Cohasset High, she is entering her sophomore year at Dension University. She is majoring in education and communications.

All the playground staff deserve some thanks for their hard work and willingness to contribute to the cost of their training and for donating their time to make the sleepover a reality. Hey, these people even paid half the bill for their T-shirts.

But most of all they deserve praise for what they gave the children — caring and concern.

Goedecke praised for new sidewalk

To the Editor:

Bravo to Jane Goedecke for donating excess campaign funds to the town for a worthwhile project. I believe we should endeavor to encourage this type of positive behavior by our elected officials. The media could give it front page coverage — call it the Goedecke challenge, or something catchy like that. Candidates for statewide office could be asked to donate 5.95% (in 1990) or 6.25% (in 91) of their gross (currently nontaxable) campaign contributions. Those running for federal office would be expected to pony up 28%. Local officials could be asked for the percentage increase of local property taxes.

Candidates could try to outdo each other on the campaign trial by donating more than their opponent (I might consider voting for someone who was directly contributing to public revenues versus another who was trying to increase my contribution). It might be downright exciting to follow in the papers how much of those large sums collected at political fundraisers was going directly toward solving our assorted fiscal disasters.

I say this only partly tongue in cheek. Not to poke fun at Jane — I think what she did is commendable — but as a serious attempt at shaking up those in positions of responsibility and spurring them to action.

How about a referendum item?

Political solicitation at RTF supported

(The following letter was submitted for publication.)

To Mr. Michael Sullivan
Chairman
Cohasset Board of Health

I am pleased to hear that the board has apparently decided to amend the proposed general landfill regulation discussed at your July 17 meeting by removing the requirements that a person obtain prior permission before soliciting at the RTF and which prohibited more than two persons from a cause to solicit at the same time.

I expect that the revised regulation would read something like this:

"All solicitation at the Recycling/Transfer Station will occur on the exit road approximately seventy-five (75) feet from the exit."

This revised regulation, although an improvement, would also be unconstitutional, because it would enforce a sweeping prohibition against exercise of First Amendment rights that is not narrowly drawn to accomplish a compelling government interest and would be unduly restrictive of First Amendment rights.

As I understand it, the purpose of the regulation is to protect public safety and reduce interference with RTF operations by preventing people from obstructing traffic in front of the recycling bins.

Practically speaking, there are two major problems with this proposed regulation:

(1) It will prohibit peaceful soliciting which in no way interferes with the operation of the RTF nor the flow of traffic — thus unnecessarily restricting freedom of speech.

(2) It will not prohibit other actions which may obstruct traffic or interfere with RTF operations — and thus will fail to fully achieve it's stated purpose.

I suggest, instead, that the board adopt the following:

"No person shall willfully or unreasonably obstruct the flow of vehicular traffic to and from the recycling bins and/or the general refuse disposal area, or interfere with the operation of the Recycling/Transfer Station."

This proposed alternative regulation has the advantage of dealing precisely with the problem which the board is trying to address, and should not, except in an incidental sense, interfere with First Amendment rights.

I also suggest that the board of health, before taking the drastic step of restricting First Amendment activities on public property, first consider other methods to deal with the traffic congestion at the RTF. Perhaps a reconfiguration of the recycling area that would give more area for the cars to park and to turn around would help alleviate the problem.

The parcel of land occupied by the RTF and the former town dump on Cedar Street has historically and traditionally been an area of political activity in Cohasset. However, it would be more precise to note that the entire property is not used for political activity. Specifically, it is the area where people stop their cars and get out to dispose of refuse that has been the particular area of traditional and historic political activity in Cohasset. This area, which would be wholesale banned from political activity by the board of health in their proposed regulation, is the most effective area in Cohasset for political activity.

The enclosed constitutional analysis of the regulation, which cites relevant U.S. Supreme Court cases and which analyses the regulation in light of those cases, specifically sets out some of the arguments which will most likely persuade a court that the revised regulation proposed by the board, even though improved, would still be unconstitutional.

In summary, the following line of argument firmly establishes that the proposed regulation would be found unconstitutional [Citations of supporting Supreme Court cases are found in the enclosed constitutional analysis]:

(A) Political activities to be prohibited by this regulation are protected by the U.S. Bill of Rights and the Mass. Declaration of Rights.

(B) Public property which is a traditional public forum merits special First Amendment protection.

(C) Municipalities do have authority under the constitution to protect public safety and to preserve the use of public facilities for citizens who use them for other than First Amendment purposes.

(D) However, a regulation infringing on First Amendment rights must be narrowly drawn to further a legitimate government interest and must not be unduly restrictive of First Amendment rights.

The proposed regulation is not "narrowly drawn,"

Mosquito wars: run for cover

By Rosemarie Terruso
Mariner staff

Get out the long sleeve shirts and insect repellent, it's mosquito time again and some of those bloodthirsty denizens of summer are carrying Eastern equine encephalitis.

Cases of EEE are rare, said public health commissioner David Mulligan, but the health threat the disease poses to humans can be fatal.

The disease is caused by a virus carried by a species of swamp-breeding mosquitoes. The female of the species feeds on birds. The virus had been contained in the birds and the mosquitoes themselves, but recently the virus has been isolated in mosquitoes that bite humans.

"We have trapped mosquitoes carrying the virus," said DPH spokesman Mary Ann Hart.

"We found the virus in Lakeville, Halifax and Raynham. What's different this time is that we found it in a mosquito that bites humans."

She said the health department is concerned because the disease is not usually found this early in the season.

"It's been a very wet summer," Hart continued; " "and we would advise people in southeastern Massachusetts to protect themselves and their children."

Mosquitoes are always a concern, said Norfolk County Mosquito Control Supervisor John Smith.

He said the mosquito spraying program starts in March and continues through September.

He said this year's mosquito problem isn't as serious as last year's invasion.

"It's been kind of mild this year," Smith said. "Last year was the worst year for mosquitoes in 30 years."

According to Smith, mosquitoes are a prolific group with new generations hatching every few days.

"Five to 10 days after a rainfall," Smith said, "you have a whole new batch."

Smith said Norfolk County residents may contact him at 762-3681 Fridays after 1 p.m. to find out when his crews will be spraying their neighborhoods.

EEE is a concern every summer in the southeastern part of the state and public health officials recommend that humans take special care to avoid the risk of mosquito bites.

- If you're going to a freshwater swamp area, wear protective clothing such as long pants and long-sleeved shirts.
- Use mosquito repellent before dusk and into the evening.
- Keep window screens securely fastened to all doors and windows.
- Use insecticides if you find mosquitoes in your home.
- Keep out of mosquito breeding grounds and marshes. Overnight camping or other outdoor exposure in freshwater swamps of southeastern Massachusetts (not including Cape Cod and the Islands) should be avoided.
- The department warns that young children and infants especially should be protected. Children are often not aware they are being bitten and will often not protect themselves against mosquito bites.
- Use insect repellent containing DEET. These products can be applied to the skin or clothing and aid in the prevention of tick and mosquito bites. DEET may have a toxic effect or cause allergic reactions in children and adults, especially when used in high concentration. Wearing clothing treated with permethrin along with the use of a repellent, provides the maximum protection against mosquito bites.

McNabb's politics

since it would forbid First Amendment activities which would have no impact on the operation of the RTF nor on public safety, and because it is not written with "reasonable specificity" to address the concern which the board seeks to address. Thus, it would be "unduly restrictive" of First Amendment rights, since it clearly would prohibit more First Amendment activity than is necessary to achieve the purpose of the regulation. Based on the above reference d constitutional lines of authority established by the U.S. Supreme Court, the regulation would thus be found unconstitutional.

I urge the board of health to reject their proposed revised regulation, and to consider as an alternative a regulation, proposed above, which addresses only the public safety concerns and does not appear to interfere with First Amendment rights.

Sincerely,
John K. McNabb, Jr.

(Editor's note: The analysis to support the letter is a seven page document.)

Hull church success

St. Mary of the Assumption, the Catholic Parish serving Hull and portions of Hingham and Cohasset, announced that it has succeeded in raising $417,000 during the four months of its capital campaign. The campaign goal was $350,000. Carol Krzywda, the campaign chair, expressed delight with the effort saying, "It certainly proves that when you get people working together in Hull, you can move mountains."

Last week, the success of the fund raising drive prompted the administrators of the Catholic Archdiocese of Boston to grant their authorization to the parish to proceed with the project. Together, the parish and the Archdiocese contracted last week to hire the Boston firm of deCastro/Nelson as the architect for the $2 million project. The parish's pastor, Rev. Robert Butler, explained that "Our parishioners and committees were very satisfied with the fine work of deCastro/Nelson during our feasibility study."

The donations were given to cover portions of the renovation of St. Ann's Church and the construction of a new church hall. The balance of needed funds will be generated by selling the large rectory site and the two churches in Hull that were closed in September of 1988.

The plans that will soon be presented to the various town boards include designs for future additions to expand the church.

The police/firestation renovation committee is questioning the selectmens' insistence that a connecting door be installed between the two departments. One member feels the existence of a door will be a security risk since he knows "a lot of nuts come into a police department."

Team closes season swimmingly well

By Linda Henderson
Special to the mariner

The South Shore League Swimming Championships on Saturday, Aug. 11 were brought to an early close by torrential rains, thunder and lightning. 16 and Under butterflyers Topher Henderson (undefeated on the season) and Kate deLima (swimming up an age group) waited on deck for an hour and a half , but with no end to the rain in sight, the coaches of the six teams involved decided to call the meet with the scores as they stood.

Cohasset had 125 points; Hanover, 110; Scituate Harbor Yacht Club, 109; K. of C., 91; Aqua-Dux, 65 and Duxbury Yacht Club, 53. It was a win for Cohasset, but not the sort of win they'd have liked, especially Niffy Jackson, Maureen Long and Topher Henderson who in their last championships were prevented from swimming four events each.

For the championships, each club by means of timings, chooses its fastest swimmer in each event to represent it. This is limited only by the rule that no swimmer may swim in more than four events. The finishes in these races tend to be very close and simply to have swum in the finals (or in the case of this year, to have been chosen to swim in the finals) is an honor. Coaches Kate Anderson and Sara Tague found it difficult to make choices from a team with depth like Cohasset's. Often the difference between being chosen and not being chosen is measured in hundredths of a second.

In the diving competition, 16 and under diver, Kate deLima (undefeated in the regular season) finished first. In the 12 and under diving, Dawn Meehan was second, capping another successful season.

In the 10 and under 50 free, Greg Bilton was first and Maren Cameron was second.

In the 16 and under I.M., Chip Anderson was first and Niffy Jackson was second to a fellow Gator.

In the 14 and under I.M., David Leahy was first and Becky Golden was third.

In the 12 and under I.M., Nick Hawks and Heather Littlehale were both first.

In the boys 8 and under freestyle, Peter Minnar was third.

In the girls 8 and under freestyle, Sarah Chin was second.

In the boys 10 and under freestyle, Justin Golden was third.

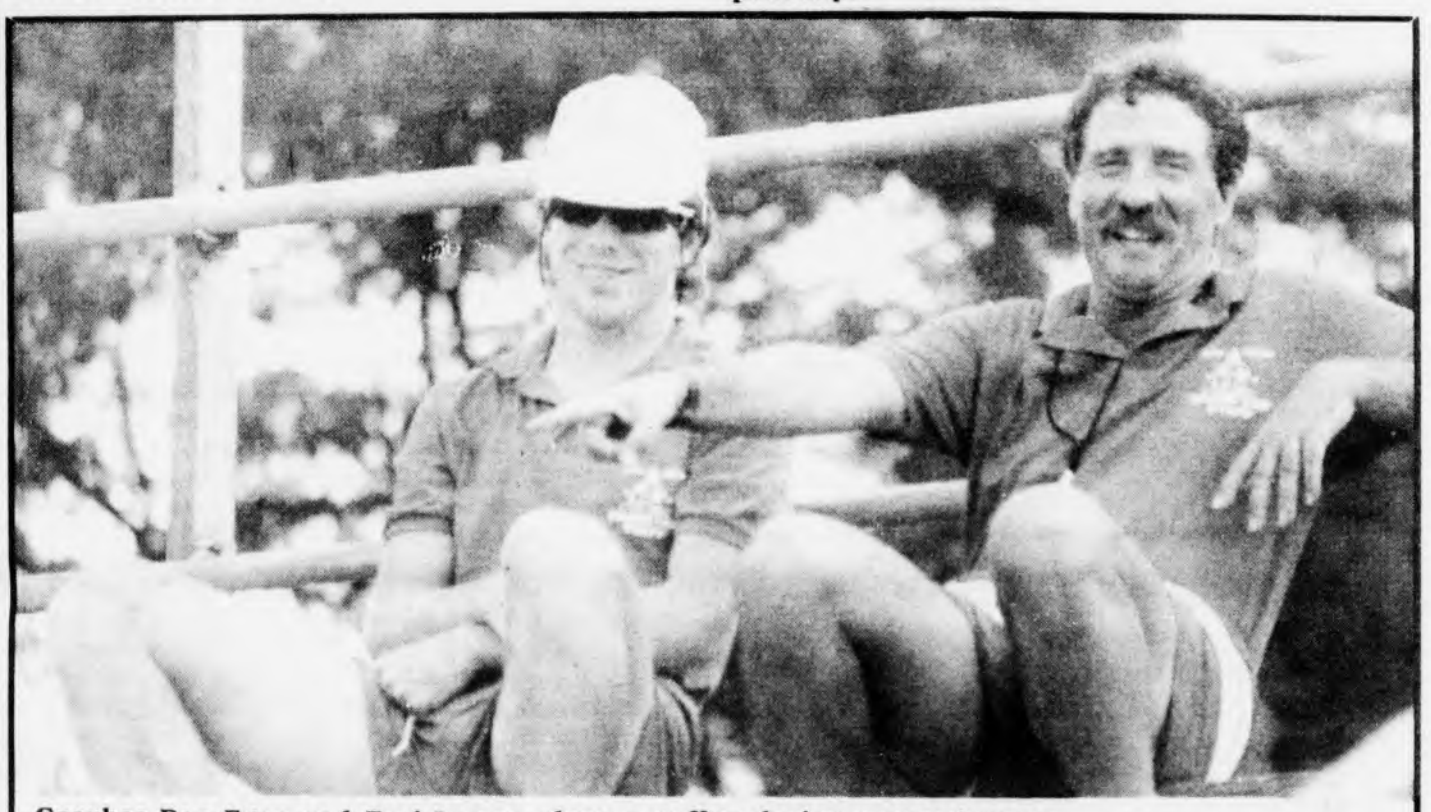
In the girls 10 and under freestyle, Hannah Beggari was sixth.

In the 12 and under 50 yd. freestyle, Tom Greco was first and Lauren deVito was second.

In the 14 and under 50 yard freestyle, Chris Kondrat was first and Tracy was fourth.

In the 16 and under 50 yard freestyle, Rob Davis was first.

In the 10 and under butterfly, Derek Bugley and Cara McKenny were both fourth.



In the 12 and under butterfly, Ted Reardon was first and Emily Henderson was fifth.

In the 14 and under butterfly, Chris Kondrat was second and Tina Rousseau was fifth.

Congratulations to all the fine divers and swimmers who gave Cohasset its second consecutive undefeated season and its second consecutive championship!

Children of alcoholics

Screening interviews have begun for two new therapy groups for Adult Children of Alcoholics, starting in September in Norwell, one on Monday nights, the other on Wednesdays.

Both are 16-week, eight-member groups, designed for those adults in beginning stages of examining the impact of a parent's alcoholism and grieving the related losses. The groups have also been helpful in the past to those people raised by parents who were impaired by dysfunctions or trauma besides alcoholism, such as drug addiction, mental illness, depression, physical or sexual abuse, abandonment and religious fanaticism.

The groups are offered at Centering Psychological Services, 148 Washington St. and facilitated by Rich Elliott, LICSW, who has been leading Adult Children groups since 1983. He can be reached to arrange a screening interview at 982-9004. Many health insurances are accepted. There are presently no openings in the two long-term, open-ended psychotherapy groups for Adult Children, also directed by Elliott.

Due to the intensity of the groups, those with active substance abuse problems or major mental illnesses will not be appropriate at this time.

Babysitting course

The Cohasset Community Center's babysitting course was completed on August 1. The participants included: Keeley Dwyer, Kerry Dwyer, Jennifer Cellucci, Kathleen Fitzsimmons, Martha McLaughlin, Elizabeth Hills, James Hills, Adrianne Sullivan, Meredith Equi, Jessie Sandell, and Lindy Holway.

"Now, you'll need to clear the DEQE, EPA, FAA, FDA, FDIC, DPW, BMOC... and we'll have you in business by '94!"

Moving vans and U-hauls are on a one-way road out of Massachusetts. Because the red-tape, tax-crazy Dukakis administration has made it tougher to do business here.
We need tax inducements, stable government and active recruiting and promotion to get business to come here, grow here, and stay here. This is how to create jobs.
My experience as CEO of a $140 million company employing 1,000 people at more than 125 Massachusetts locations will help us attract business, not frighten it away.
I will be asking for your help.

Greenbush line calls for alternatives

"It is vanilla," he said, "it doesn't really say anything."

"I would have ben happier if the secretary was more specific about where he found the document insufficient and provided the MBTA with some direction.

"This is deferring a decision into the future, when there won't be any opportunity to talk about it any longer."

The Hingham Village Association is preparing a statement on the certificate that is supportive of its call for alternatives to the Greenbush line.

A draft of the association's response praises DeVillars for pointing out the "absurd logic" of the MBTA's noise and vibration impacts and conservation issues that were "sadly glossed over."

In the certificate DeVillars cites the outpouring of comment the DEIS/R has prompted.

"This extraordinary level of participation in the environmental review process is both a reflection of the magnitude of the project and a demonstration of the success of the public involvement efforts on the part of the MBTA," DeVillars wrote.

"Because of he broad range of area and issues related to this project I am pleased by this kind participation."

In the report DeVillars calls for more information on the draft's noise impact assessments.

He cites a critique of the methodology provided by the preservation consulting firm of Fannin-Lehner, which was retained by the historic commission.

"The thrust of this comment, which is echoed by others, reflects concern that the noise assessment, (and therefore the mitigation which is considered), is understated," he wrote.

DeVillars takes issue with only a few of impact assessments for the Middleborough and Plymouth Lines; most of his concerns fall along the Greenbush Line.

"This section of the project involves the greatest level of impact in many ways, including some issues that are uniquely particular to the town of Hingham," DeVillars wrote.

"The Greenbush Line has 43 public grade crossings as compared to 17 and 24 for the Middleborough and Plymouth lines respectively."

In response to these impacts DeVillars called for further exploration of all alternatives before the final impact report is issued.

He specifically calls for studying improved bus service to the area, an exclusive high occupancy vehicle lane on Route 3 and locating commuter rail tracks along Route 3.

Elsewhere in the report DeVillars supported all applicable historic reviews, 4(f) and Section 106 reviews, that will affect Hingham.

Wetlands and water issues must also be re-evaluated before the final draft can be issued.

"Generally the level of detail provided in the DEIS/R...must be improved," DeVillars wrote, calling for in-depth discussion of conservation issues including the use of herbicides and other chemicals along the right-of-way.

Resignation

Selectmen accepted Robert Pape's resignation from the board of registrars Aug. 6 "with deep regret and sincere thanks." Pape was chairman of the board.

With the deadline for voter registration coming up soon, the selectmen appointed Janet MacLure to serve the balance of Pape's term of office.

Pape's term expires in February, 1991.

Library party

All children who have participated in this summer's "Undercover Investigator" reading program are invited to a party at the Paul Pratt Library on Friday, Aug. 24, at 2 p.m. Refreshments will be served and certificates awarded to all participants. Over 100 readers have turned in reading cards. Those unable to attend will receive their certificates in school in the fall.

Bike sponsors

For the third year in a row, Marcy Brown will be bicycling 194 miles for the Annual Pam Mass Challenge.

The two-day bike ride from Sturbridge to Provincetown hopes to raise 1.5 million dollars for the Dana Farber Cancer Institute's Jimmy Fund. This is the eleventh year that over 800 riders and 400 other volunteers will be joining efforts to raise the much needed funds. This year is proving to be especially difficult because of the state's economy.

Marcy is the daughter of Merle and Joan Brown of Beechwood Street. Anyone wishing to sponsor Marcy with a pledge of any amount, call 383-1625. Leave your name, phone number, and the amount you wish to pledge.

Cohasset Mariner

Vol. XII, No. 48 | Thursday, August 23, 1990 | 1-800-649-6661 | 50 cents

The harbor bylaw governing how both sailboats and motor boats can alternately use Little Harbor is really quite specific, as long as most folks can remember even and odd days.

(Cartoon by J. Hamilton)

State aid reduced $144,093

Cohasset got the Cherry Sheet figures from the state and the news is not good.

According to Executive Secretary Greg Doyon, the town may have to have a special town meeting to deal with the shortfall in anticipated revenues. Doyon expects the town can rebalance its budget by reallocating funds and making appropriations from free cash.

For fiscal 1991, Cohasset will get $104,351 less in state aid than the previous year. The state has also increased assessments to the town by $39,742, giving the town a grand total of $144,093 less to work with than in fiscal 1990.

Line item budgets will not be reduced on a dollar-for-dollar basis. The Cherry Sheet money is used to offset the budget as a whole. It is up to the voters at special town meeting to decide how to deal with the loss of anticipated revenue.

The state stills owes Cohasset $50,000 in fiscal 1990 state aid that had been impounded by Gov. Michael Dukakis. That money can be appropriated by special town meeting to offset the reduced Cherry Sheet aid.

Grasping for political issues

By Robert J. Flavell
Executive editor

Imploring an indifferent public for attention, grasping frantically for issues and bemoaning the larger political conflicts that steal their thunder, the seven candidates for state senate slog toward the September 18 primary.

The hot August dog days of summer are hard on a politician. He arrives drenched in his own sweat at a voter's front door only to find no one home to hear his pitch. He stands exhausted on the streetcorner, a winning smile pasted on his shopworn face, while beach-bound citizens impatiently rush past him. He offers to speak before organizations whose members prefer to chat among themselves. He travels to fairs and celebrations, where he is pointedly ignored. His dire warnings fall on deaf ears, his deathless prose commands no attention.

This is August in an election year.

A politician cannot compete with summer. He plays a poor second to surf and cotton candy; his message is serious at a time reserved for fun and frolic. He is a man in a suit and tie, in a world of neon bathing trunks. He cannot rivet anyone's attention; he's lucky if he can even get a hearing for a few precious moments.

SEVEN HEARTY SOULS

Yet seven hearty souls -- four Democrats and three Republicans -- have sacrificed their summer to handshake their way up and down the seven-town Norfolk-Plymouth senatorial district, determined to keep interest in their campaigns alive until Labor Day, the traditional start of the political season.

On the Democratic side are State Rep. Robert B. Ambler, State Rep. William Flynn and Selectman Brian McDonald, all of Weymouth, and School Committee Chairman John Creed of Marshfield. Vying for the Republican nomination are Robert Hedlund of Weymouth, Donald Hussey of Hingham and Christy Mihos of Cohasset.

All seven seek to replace Democrat William Golden, who is giving up the seat to seek his party's nomination for lieutenant governor.

And all seven say they are doing what they can to drum up enthusiasm -- handshaking, holding signs on expressway bridges and highways, going door-to-door, trying to raise money and generally keeping themselves visible.

"It's difficult," admits Weymouth Democrat Brian McDonald, in his fifth year as selectman and on leave from the state Department of Revenue. "People are away; coordinators are out of town on vacation for two or three weeks at a time.

"A campaign is a campaign, but people have lives to live as well. But we're about to pass the main vacation season." Things will perk up right after Labor Day, McDonald says, "and then it'll be full-tilt, 20 hours a day."

Flynn, a state rep. for Hanover, Norwell and Rockland who has been in the Legislature for 15 years, wonders if the press is doing the job.

PEOPLE NOT FOCUSED

"It's not just our race [that isn't attracting attention.] I don't think people are really focused yet. I don't think the press is doing much to find out what's going on, either."

Rita Burke strikes out for morality

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

A small statue of an angel perches on a rock in Rita Burke's garden in Cohasset, watching over the phlox and hollyhocks. Inside the house, more angels stand guard on table tops and sofa backs. But the most important angel of all cannot be seen by the eye, only with the heart. Burke's guardian angel watches over her, guides her — and when things seems most bleak, reminds her of all that is right and beautiful in the world.

The guardian angel is doing double time these days as Burke goes into battle against immorality in the media and on display in the nation's art galleries. As president of the Massachusetts chapter of Morality in the Media, Burke has become a national spokesman against the controversial Mapplethorpe photographs and the newest exhibit entitled "The Emperor's New Clothes: Censorship, Sexuality and the Body Politic."

To understand Burke, you must understand the role religion plays in her life. A devout Roman Catholic, Burke's faith sustains her, illuminates her life and draws her into a public role.

She believes everything comes down to the family, and the family is the province of the wife and mother. At the same time, she felt called to action.

$1.50 lunch

Lunch prices in the schools are going up by 25 cents — except at the elementary level.

The new price is $1.50 for lunches at Deer Hill and the junior/senior high school. Lunches at Osgood remain at $1.25.

School committee voted on the price hike Monday night.

The increase is due to rising food prices as well a decrease in food commodities supplied by the federal government.

The price of milk will be 35 cents a carton. Kindergarten snack will cost 35 cents.

Cohasset's week

Local volunteers needed

Do you love to show off Cohasset to friends from out of town? Do you brag about its charm and beauty? Then the Historical Commission needs your help.

The commission is shy one member. If you have some time to donate to preserve your home town, contact the selectmen's office to volunteer.

If things historic aren't your cup of tea, there may be a spot waiting for you on the zoning board of appeals, the advisory committee or one of a score of other committees, boards or commissions.

Diesel fuel bid awarded

Selectmen awarded the contract for the town's supply of diesel fuel to Global Petroleum Corporation, the second low bidder.

Selectmen have been negotiating since June with the low bidder and last year's contract holder to reimburse the town for some gasoline-contaminated diesel fuel they sold the town. The tainted fuel did some damage for which the town wanted payment.

According to Executive Secretary Greg Doyon, the old supplier is not interested in making good on the bad fuel. The town is considering other options for recouping its losses and damages.

MAPC updates & changes

The Metropolitan Area Planning Council will no longer routinely handle environmental reviews for local communities. According to selectman Martha Gjesteby, the group will only tackle reviews in large cases involving the region.

Selectmen designated the chairman of the planning board as the community environmental reviewer to pick up the tasks formerly handled by MAPC. The current chairman of the planning board is Robert H. Sturdy.

Selectmen added the provision that the newly designated community environmental reviewer must seek input from all boards, including the selectmen.

MAPC representatives will come to selectmen's meeting in the near future to brief the town on the Metro 2000 Report. and new developments that will affect Cohasset and the region.

Liquor license woes

The defunct Cohasset Meat & Produce Centre, Inc. continues to create headaches for the town. Although the business is in bankruptcy court, the bankruptcy trustee informed Executive Secretary Greg Doyon he will not voluntarily relinquish the wines & malt beverages license held by the business.

Sea 'n Cheese has already made it clear they want to move into a portion of the space formerly occupied by the bankrupt supermarket and will need a transfer of their license from the old site in Cushing Plaza to the proposed new site.

Selectmen cannot have two licenses held by two different businesses in the same address. When Sea 'n Cheese submits a complete application the town will have to deny their request or schedule a hearing to revoke the license held by Cohasset Meat & Produce.

The town tried revoking a liquor license once before and had their decision overturned by a court.

Volunteers help harbor

A cadre of volunteers replanked the ramps and floats at Government Island.

"You just can't realize the job they did," selectmen Chairman Rocco Laugelle said. "You have to see it to believe it."

According to Executive Secretary Greg Doyon, the hard workers recruited by Cohasset's can-do Harbor Master Irving Gadow included Bob Baggs, Paul Figueiredo, Jim Figueiredo, Scott Herzog, William Kelly, Floyd Robbins, Sheldon Sladen, Charles Wood, Wayne Higgins, Paul Laugelle and Peter Souther.

"Three cheers," Selectman Diana Kornet said.

Rescue boat moulders

Selectman Martha Gjesteby paid an impromptu visit on the fire department after hearing complaints about the neglect of the rescue boat.

She said the boat, kept outdoors behind the station, is "very sloppily maintained. According to Gjesteby, the boat is uncovered, full of water and the life preservers are in disarray.

Gjesteby wasn't satisfied by Fire Chief Brock's explanation that the cover had blown off during the winter. Brock promised to recover it next winter.

At a minimum, Gjesteby wants the water dumped out and the life preservers fixed. She said the boat was bought in 1981 with money donated by many citizens. Gjesteby worried that citizens would stop supporting town departments if this was an example of the attitude of officials.

Selectmen Chairman Rocco Laugelle said he would urge Brock to take care of the matter.

Annual tag sale slated

Selectmen granted permission to the Community Center to hold their third annual tag sale on the town common Sept. 23 from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m.

"I think it's become an event people look forward to," Selectman Diana Kornet said.

Community Center representative Diane Dooley said the center will rent table space and clean up the common when the event ends.

Cohasset's week

Soccer fete to be held

The Cohasset girls soccer team invited the team from landlocked Keene, N.H. to scrimmage Sept. 1. With the approval of the selectmen, the Cohasset team also will treat their guests to a cookout and an afternoon on Sandy Beach.

According to team member Allison Ludlow, about 45 to 50 girls will congregate at the north end of the beach. The barbecue grills will be set up in the triangular turn out at that end.

Committee reactivated

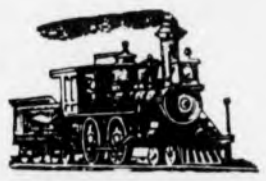
Selectmen decided to reactive the financial planning committee to help them with some long range planning before town meeting. Selectman Jane Goedecke suggested the action.

The town accountant, executive secretary, town treasurer and representatives from the selectmen, advisory committee, assessors, school department and capital budget committee will serve on the reactivated planning group. The first meeting will be posted for Sept. 12.

"We have the cherry sheet," Goedecke said. "Certainly we have enough significant financial information to start with."

Bates fate undetermined

When town meeting approved building an addition to town hall, they thought the town would sell the Bates Building that had held the town office overflow. The building has an estimated value in the $100,000 to $200,000 range. Instead, selectmen granted use of the building to the Rotary Club and the sewer department.



Now several groups are vying for a piece of the property. The Rotary Club, VFW Post # 9146, the Council on Aging and a group hoping to develop low-cost housing would like to lease the building.

Selectmen directed Ralph Perroncello, commander of the VFW post, to get together with representatives of the other groups to determine how the needs of all four groups can be accommodated. The selectmen also want to know what kind of financial contribution the groups would make in exchange for use of the building.

Selectmen Chairman Rocco Laugelle warned the board members to act soon, saying if they took no action the building would fall into disrepair like the former fire station in the West End.

Anti-train flags are beginning to appear in Cohasset these days.

Police station renovations go out to bid

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

Selectmen gave the police-fire station renovation committee permission to send their plans out to bid. If all goes as planned, the renovations should be underway in October. Selectmen were assured the building will satisfy state minimum standards when the renovations are completed.

Renovation Chairman David Chase and architect Roger Hoit told selectmen they hope the current economic conditions will create a bidding war and allow the project to come in under the $396,000 allocated for the project. If there is a surplus in the budget, they would like to tackle some of the wish list items they had to put on reserve.

Hoit told selectmen the appearance of the building's front would not change, but the elements would be replaced or upgraded with low-maintenance and energy-efficient materials.

The architect said the rotted woodwork, gutters and fascias would be replaced with pressure-treated wood or aluminum. The roof will be redone as well.

Selectmen Chairman Rocco Laugelle cheered that part of the project. He visited the departments during a recent downpour.

"It leaks well down there," Laugelle said. "Ten years ago this roof was leaking.

Other exterior changes will include revamping the front entries and making them handicapped accessible.

Inside the buildings, the police department will have safety partitions installed for the protection of the officers. The fire department will also have a renovated public area.

Both departments will have air-conditioning in the heavily-used work areas. To save money, the renovation committee will use the existing window units in conjunction with zoned central air-conditioning.

The cell area in the police department will not be air-conditioned, but the ventilation system will be improved.

The renovations to the work area will include new flooring, new walls, handicapped accessible toilet facilities and new furniture and furnishings. A door connecting the two departments is also planned.

The aging boiler will be replaced and energy-efficient doors will be installed. Hoit estimates the changes will pay for themselves in improved fuel efficiency over a 15-year period.

The committee shaved costs off the renovations by excluding some items and using town labor to complete other portions.

The town will not get the state-of-the-art communications equipment the committee hoped to include. They will look into the feasibility of leasing the equipment, however.

Paving work will be done by the town highway department.

"Harold is an expert at that sort of thing," Chase said of Highway Surveyor Harold Litchfield.

The town tree and parks department under Peter Laugelle will be tapped for landscaping work.

Although the police department would like to replace the porcelain toilet facilities in the cells with stainless steel for safety reasons, that part of the project was omitted as too costly. Hoit estimated it would cost $12,000 to replumb and install the stainless steel fixtures.

The fixtures appear on the alternatives list in case additional funds are available.

Hoit and Chase assume the work will begin in October. Both chiefs are prepared for operating while under construction.

"There will be some hectic days," Hoit warned, but expects the departments will need to use trailers only for locker facilities during the construction.

After signing off on the renovation plans, selectmen approved payment of $14,400 in architectural fees.

Cohasset Agrees CARE to Recycle Everything

By Alix White
Special to the Mariner

Tip of the Week: Poison Ivy

In reading the July issue of the Natural Organic Farmer's Association Newsletter I came across this "hot" tip: Pour boiling water on poison ivy to eradicate it. It may take two to three applications. One farmer has found that it works well.

I was never allergic to poison ivy until my adulthood. I have heard many similar stories from around town. Today, I don't take chances — I dress for gardening. I wear long pants and a long-sleeved cotton work shirt. This stylish outfit gets filthy and so it hangs out in the toolshed next to the hoe and the rake and my garden shoes. I have found that dressing in this manner protects me from not only poison ivy but bug bites, scratches and sunburns.

The other eradication method I have found that works for poison ivy is to find a person who is not allergic to poison ivy and have them pull it out for you. In our family that used to be me. I have found another person to do this. They dress as if they were allergic (long pants, long-sleeved shirt). They wash their hands (even though they wore gloves) and face afterwards just as a precaution. This has worked well for us. A reminder: this person is a valuable resource so pay them well.

Troubleshooting at the RTF:

Hazardous Waste Day is Saturday, September 15 at Cohasset High School. Please watch this column for more information on the items you will be able to bring.

Cans: Food and beverage cans are acceptable. Non redeemable aluminum cans are also acceptable here. No aerosol, no paint cans please.

Clothes: Salvation Army now has a bin for clothes and will pick up every other day. Place clothes in the red drop-off box conveniently located between the glass and the Boutique.

Glass: Don't forget to take the tops and metal rings off your glass bottles, and rinse the out with a little water. Are you getting sick of me saying this? Gosh, I feel like your mother.

Plastic: We accept plastic jugs of resins #1 or #2 — everything else goes in the trash, sadly that includes yoghurt, cottage cheese containers and most bathroom plastic containers. The way to make sure if your container is made of #1 or #2 resin, simply look on the bottom of your container for the chasing arrow symbol with the number inside it. If there is #1 or #2, please recycle it: otherwise, please throw it in the trash.

Thanks for bearing with us...Things change and move around at the RTF. With every move we are trying to serve you better. As more and more towns follow our lead and start to recycle, markets change. We are constantly looking for better prices for our commodities. This keeps the price of our waste down.

Our glass, plastic, newsprint etc. is worth more when it is properly prepared. We on the Recycling Committee ask for your support in following the simple preparation guidelines at home, and when you get to the RTF take a minute to see if things have changed.

This week, clothes now go in the red Salvation Army bin.

Railroad is 'top priority'

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

Calling the abandonment of Old Colony service in 1959 "the worst transportation decision this Commonwealth has ever made," Governor Michael Dukakis is pushing for the rail's restoration to be the state's top priority.

In a letter to Rep. Thomas P. Kennedy, D-Brockton, dated Aug. 10, Dukakis wrote that he will do everything in his power to "achieve a ground breaking before leaving office on Jan. 3."

"Fortunately the rights-of-way were retained in public ownership, making restoration a realistic possibility," Dukakis wrote.

Dukakis also expressed his commitment to the Old Colony and the Central Artery/Third Harbor Tunnel projects as being mutually beneficial.

"For the Old Colony and South Shore areas the Artery-Tunnel will provide a greatly improved ability to move people and goods to Logan Airport, the Port of Boston, and points north of the city," he wrote.

"This is essential to the economic well-being of the entire region. Moreover, the Old Colony project and the Artery-Tunnel will intersect at South Station in a way that enables travelers from south of Boston to arrive at South Station, check into their flights, and go by direct shuttle to their air terminals."

Senate hopefuls

Flynn, a Democrat, is particularly annoyed that the press ignored his endorsement for the Citizens for Limitation Taxation drive to roll taxes and fees back to their 1988 levels.

"If the press would be more focused [on the race], people would be more focused on it. Maybe everybody's just getting their second wind after the $1.8 billion tax package," he says.

One problem with getting press attention in the dog days of summer is that so little of news value is going on.

There isn't much a politicians can do to arouse public interest when there's no news to inspire political press aides. Worse, an important event -- American soldiers being sent to Saudi Arabia, for example -- can so capture the public attention that local politicians get scant attention.

Press releases grow desperate as writers flounder to find something intelligent and newsworthy for the candidate to say.

In one recent release, Flynn "reiterated his visionary approach toward state government." In another, dated August 1, he reminded people to vote on Sept. 18.

"We need four or five more debates" to attract the public attention, Flynn says, but even the League of Women voters ignored his requests. He says he wrote to the Weymouth and Hingham LWVs months ago asking them to sponsor debates, but never got an answer.

Meanwhile, he says he's just done a "major mailing" of 5,000 pieces, has phone banks going three or four days a week, and is doing the usual meetings, canvassing, organizing and handshaking.

One focus the press has taken in Flynn's regard is his move from Hanover to Weymouth to run for the Senate seat.

'CARPETBAGGER' ISSUE

Flynn bristles at the "carpetbagger" label his opponents seek to pin on him.

"I'm still an effective voice for Hanover, Rockland and Norwell in the Legislature even though I don't physically live there," he says. "I've lived on the South Shore all of my life and am concerned with regional issues.

"Before the gerrymander seven or eight years ago, two of my towns were in this (Senate) district, and I've represented Hingham in the House (before the House was reduced). I've had a law practice in Hingham for 20 years. My roots are in Plymouth County, unlike Ambler, who never sets foot here."

For all the breastbeating that the candidates have done, one thing is clear: Ambler is the man to beat.

Flynn calls him "Mr. Inside Player." Hedlund snipes at Ambler continuously. McDonald points to Ambler's rollcall record. Creed cites Ambler's fundraising efforts, as does Hussey's campaign manager, Howard Hay, who ran against Ambler in 1984.

What does Ambler say to all this attention?

'STEW IN THEIR OWN JUICE'

"I let them stew in their own juice," says Ambler, who clearly has widespread labor support (after 29 years as a union business agent) and plenty of money to run a strong race.

"I learned a long time ago, when I was a kid, something my mother told me. The person who points the finger is the guilty party. They point fingers at me because they don't want to draw attention to their own records -- because they have no records to stand on."

Ambler's opponents alternately paint him as the tool of the powerful, or argue that he isn't minding the store.

"Look, I'm 63 years old. I've got six grandchildren," Ambler says. "It would be easy for me to just walk away. But I want to bring some productivity and progress to the South Shore area and end this chaos."

John Creed

Robert Hedlund

Donald Hussey

Ambler dismisses attacks on his voting record, distinguishing rollcall votes from quorum calls, and citing a 92 percent rollcall record over his 26 years in the House.

"A quorum call means that someone is trying to delay something," he says. "It's a parliamentary tactic to stretch things out. If I'm down at the McCormack Building solving a constituent's problem, I'm not going to run back to the State House so someone can grandstand."

Ambler says he's holding "tons" of coffee klatches and cocktail parties around the district, running a phone bank, computerizing the names of potential voters and "working every day and evening" to keep interest alive.

He just had a 30,000-piece mailing, maintains headquarters in Weymouth and Brant Rock, and has more than 5,000 names on his supporter list.

$170,000 RAISED

What really annoys his opponents is the $170,000+ Ambler has raised for the Senate race, a far higher number than any of them can boast.

Creed, for example, says he has no estimate of what he will spend in the primary, but acknowledges that "there's no way I can compete with Mr. Ambler. I knew that going in and it will be up to the voters to see what people are paying for in this campaign."

Creed's campaign is run from his kitchen table and his nephew's house. His nephew serves as his campaign manager.

"I know the odds, but I'm the best candidate to do the job, and that's a fact," says Creed. "I'm very pleased with how I'm doing, considering where I started a few months ago."

Creed spends a lot of time going to the dump and standing outside post offices -- two good spots to greet voters, he says.

And his campaigning has given him a sense of a public distaste for incumbents, especially after the Legislature's months-long budgetary squabble.

"The querstion I'm asked most when I'm out shaking hands is: "Are you an incumbent?"

Creed admits he's never answered "yes," just to see what would happen. "They'd probably hit me with something," he laughs.

Why would people want to vote for him? "When people ask John Creed a question, they get an answer," he says. "They may not like the answer, but they get one. I don't like a lot of rhetoric."

Flynn, meanwhile, says fundraising is difficult "when you can't hit the lobbyists up for $170,000,

Dog owners put on notice

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

Selectmen told the owners of two dogs that if they can't keep their rambunctious pets confined to their own yard, the dogs will have to go. Animal Control officer William Quigley requested the hearing after getting frequent complaints since May.

"The dogs have been loose at least nine times this month, and I've picked them up twice," Quigley said. "I've gotten no cooperation."

The dogs are Labrador retrievers named Amos and Jasmin. Both dogs are approximately seven months old.

Quigley said the dogs were loose the day after owners received a letter ordering them to restrain them. He also said the dogs were unlicensed despite frequent requests.

Most of the complaints came from Brewster Road resident Marsha Ritcey.

Ritcey said the dogs have been crossing Route 3A to her home and jumping on her two-year-old grandson.

"My grandson has had nine kidney operations and he is only two. He can't be hurt this way," Ritcey said. "The dogs are not mean, they are not vicious. They are big, playful puppies and they jump on him and knock him over."

Ritcey said the dogs have taken food right out of the child's hands and have broken his toys. She said she had called Spalt more than 20 times before she finally got fed up and decided something had to be done.

Spalt was not at the hearing, but he was represented by the dogs' co-owner Margaret Lincoln and Mark Froio, both of 805A Chief Justice Cushing Highway.

Lincoln said the dogs were licensed on Friday. She also said the owners were unaware of the number of complaints because of conflicting work schedules and erased telephone messages.

Lincoln explained one of the incidents was the fault of a neighbor letting them out when she came to use Lincoln's washing machine. On another occasion, Amos got loose when he was able to slip his head through his collar because he had been sick and lost weight.

"Three days is the longest period of time I've gone without seeing the dogs," Ritcey said. "I don't dislike dogs. It's just that I can't have my grandson's life at risk."

Chairman Rocco Laugelle asked Quigley if there were any effective restraining devices he would recommend.

Quigley wasn't sure the owners could be relied on to use any device he recommended.

"It's one thing to have them and another to use them," he said. "I've impounded them, and the next day they are loose." Quigley recommended the dogs be exiled out of town.

Lincoln and Froio said they had bought chain link fencing recently and would install it as soon as possible.

Selectmen opted to give the dogs one last chance, and ordered permanent restraint.

"You can't have any accidents. You can't make any mistakes," Selectman Jane Goedecke warned.

Quigley will check to see that the fencing is installed and the dogs securely restrained.

State cuts leave town in the cold

The reduction comes on top of a town veto of a Proposition 2 1/2 override for $120,000 for the operating budget. The override failed by eight votes with more than 55 percent of the town's voters casting a ballot.

Following the defeat of the overrides, Cohasset cut the school budget by $60,000, the street paving account by $40,000, and a proposed sidewalk program by $10,000. The balance was spread among the town budgets.

According to Doyon, the town is eligible to apply for up to $46,000 in gas tax revenues dedicated to road reconstruction projects. He said Cohasset would apply for the money, with the Elm Street repaving project a priority.

Doyon was not sure whether the project qualifies for 100 percent reimbursement. Some reconstruction projects are limited to 75 percent reimbursement.

Most of the Cohasset Cherry Sheet cuts came in school aid programs. Chapter 70 and additional school assistance programs were reduced by $36,148 and school transportation was reduced by $30,060.

The METCO program took a $19,619 cut, although all but $6,700 had been announced previously.

Superintendent Stephen Hart emphasized that no cutbacks will be made in the school budget based on the Cherry Sheet alone. Hart expects the town will use the 1990 state aid the court ordered sent to local communities to offset the shortfall with additional appropriations from free cash if necessary.

Transfer needed for repairs

Several selectmen will attend Thursday's meeting of the advisory committee to request again a transfer of funds necessary to make repairs on the septic system at the town-owned duplex on Government Island. Selectmen say they need $6,000 to do the work.

The board of health gave the town 30 days to begin the repairs. The clock began running on Aug. 8. If the town does not make the repairs, the board of health will require the eviction of the tenants.

Selectmen have requested a hearing on the order to take place sometime after the meeting with the advisory board. The advisory board rejected a previous request for transfer. They consider the historic old lighthouse keeper's duplex a money pit and would like the town to sell the waterfront property.

Selectmen to perambulate

Every five years the town fathers — and mothers — are supposed to "perambulate" about the town boundaries to make sure nothing has changed.

This year selectmen Ned Tebbetts and Martha Gjesteby volunteered to make the rounds.

New selectman Jane Goedecke lent some humor to the occasion by asking Chairman Rocco Laugelle if she would need her gumboots if she went along. Laugelle assured her it was permissible to perambulate by automobile.

"If I went with you I wouldn't get lost?" she continued. Apparently Laugelle's answers weren't entirely reassuring because Goedecke didn't volunteer and waved farewell to her colleagues who will embark on the adventure.

Music Circus gets panned

People living outside the immediate neighborhood housing the South Shore Music Circus have been filing bad reviews about the decibel level of the music shows and the parking habits of showgoers.

The latest complaints came following Saturday night's show.

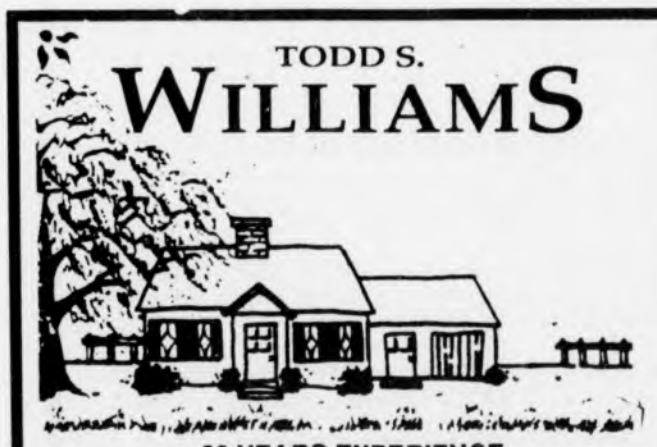
"Some shows are worse than others," Selectman Martha Gjesteby said. She said the unhappy residents were not opposed to the Music Circus, they just wanted to turn done the volume.

Selectman Diana Kornet agreed that the decibel level could use some fine tuning. She said patrons inside the tent often found the volume too high for comfortable listening.

"Maybe we have a lot of good reasons for speaking to them," she said.

Selectmen Chairman Rocco Laugelle defended the Circus. According to Laugelle, some stars won't sign contracts with the Music Circus unless they can play their music at a certain level. Laugelle said the Music Circus has had considerable difficulty filling their calendar without adding to their difficulties.

"Yes, but we have a responsibility to the people, too," Gjesteby countered.



Robert Davenport who lives directly across the street from the Music Circus isn't sure what all the fuss is about.

"I haven't had a comment yet and I've lived there 18 years," he said.

Selectmen agreed to take the matter up with the management of the Music Circus next year before they begin booking their acts.

It's time to halt the drinking at Sandy Beach

The time has come to put a stop to the drinking at Sandy Beach.

Not all drinking, mind you, just the alcoholic beverages — particularly those consumed openly by the underaged.

There are few beaches left where public drinking is quite so flagrant.

Perhaps the problem is lack of law enforcement. And certainly, the police have to take their share of the blame for a situation so open, so illegal.

But if law enforcement were more seriously administered, then the problem would just move out of the sunlight.

Do you realize the total number of arrests made by the Cohasset police department in 1989 was 182 — 21 of the total involved minors in possession of alcohol.

In nearby Hingham, police arrested 1,003 people in 1989. Well, the town is about three times larger than Cohasset. That accounts for a great deal of the difference.

But you don't see the beer cans on the beach there — or in Hull — or in Scituate.

How is it beachgoers in nearby communities manage to get through the day without a drink?

The drug and alcohol committee is beginning to work on the problem.

We're delighted that this group of people is interested enough to volunteer to work on an issue that needs attention.

We're looking forward to working with the committee to develop more awareness of the issues around drugs and alcohol.

In the meantime, we really would hope the drinking at Sandy Beach begins to rate some of the attention of the police.

It's a question of attitude.

No one — certainly not the police department — can put a stop to the problem of alcohol abuse.

The decision to deal with a problem like that can only come from within.

But the openness of the drinking at the beach sets the wrong example for the town's young people.

It's time to set a better example.

Letters

Four-wheelers save sand

To the Editor:

This letter is in regards to the cartoon which appeared on page 11 of the August 9 edition of the Cohasset Mariner. The cartoon was about the Hingham man who's truck was found on a sand dune at Sandy Beach.

The Massachusetts 4X4 Association (a 4 wheel drive vehicle owners group) would like to go on record as supporting the Cohasset Conservation Commission and their court complaint against this thoughtless individual. This person drove his vehicle onto a environmentally sensitive area of Sandy Beach causing damage to the sand dune and destroying beach grass in the process. As I am sure you know, beach grass helps stop beach erosion by trapping wind blown sand and over a period of time this trapped sand will become a sand dune. These dunes help protect the area from storms and floods. These dunes and beach vegetation must be protected.

The Mass. 4X4 Assoc. promotes the safe and responsible use of 4 wheel drive motor vehicles and does not condone such irresponsible acts as demonstrated by this individual. The Mass. 4X4 Assoc. has been involved in various civic and conservation efforts in this area. For the past 3 years members of our organization have planted beach grass in Hull as part of the Hill Conservation Commission's efforts to stop the erosion of Nantasket Beach. We would hope that this individual will be made to replace any beach grass and any other vegetation that he destroyed by his thoughtless and irresponsible act.

Sincerely Yours,
John H. Small
President
Mass. 4X4 Assoc.

Burke: Prune Mapplethorpe exhibit

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

Cohasset resident Rita Burke never had any doubt. The seven photographs in the XYZ portfolio violate obscenity laws and they have to go.

When Burke was elected president of the Massachusetts chapter of Morality in Media back in the spring, the group had already been keeping an eye on developments in the controversy surrounding the Mapplethorpe retrospective.

Early on the group issued a press release to all local media describing the seven photographs they found obscene. The release made it clear the group wants the photographs removed from the exhibit currently on display at the Institute of Contemporary Art in Boston.

The group filed suit to try to remove the offending photos. A hearing is scheduled for Sept. 5. A lawsuit against another exhibit, The Emperor's New Clothes: Censorship, Sexuality and the Body Politic, was dismissed by the court recently.

Apart from the seven photographs singled out because of their treatment of sexual behavior or use of children as nude models, the group has no objection to the exhibit. On a personal basis, Burke found additional photographs objectionable.

Morality in Media does not stand alone in their campaign against obscenity. They have been joined by other groups, such as the Catholic League, the Massachusetts chapter of Concerned Women of America, Family First, the Eagle Forum, Exodus and the Pro-Family Forum.

"Interest in the campaign kept building and building," Burke said. Because her name was on the press release, she soon became a national spokesman.

The Oprah Winfrey show had her on a panel discussing the first amendment, the New York Times interviewed her and the Boston television stations have followed her around.

"I've never been shy about letting people know where I stand," she said. "I've been on television a little, but nothing like the Oprah Winfrey show."

Some days the media attention is so overwhelming that Burke said she knows what it must feel like to try and hold back the Niagara Falls. She describes much of the publicity she has gotten as hostile or it tries to paint her as a narrow-minded, prudish fanatic.

"Anybody who protests today is the enemy," Burke said. "The media is doing a good job of trying to make the opposition look like nuts."

Burke said she copes by trying to keep the goals of Morality in Media in mind. All they seek, she said, is common decency under law.

They also want to warn people about the dangers of pornography. The group sees a direct correlation between the availability of pornography and violence against women.

As evidence, they point to the Cincinnati experience.

"The Cincinnati group came up with a definition of pornography and took action," Burke said. As a consequence, she claims the city saw an 83 percent decline in the number of rapes and violent assaults against women.

Burke said the group also has a simple equation to explain their opposition to pornography.

"Pornography promotes promiscuity and promiscuity promotes AIDS," she said.

The coalition of groups opposing the Mapplethorpe exhibit held a press conference at the State House the day before the gallery opening on Aug. 1. The exhibit drew a counter-demonstration by members of Queer Nation chanting "We're here. We're queer. We're fabulous. Get used to it."

Burke hasn't gotten used to it.

"They tried to cause a great disturbance," she said. "They had to be removed by the capitol police."

The next day Burke woke up feeling mentally and physically exhausted. She decided not to attend the gallery opening.

"Then I got to thinking about it," Burke said. "I thought I've got to got or I'd loose all credibility." She knew she would be vulnerable to attack the minute she was asked if she had actually seen the photographs.

Without stopping to dress, she hopped in her car and headed off for Boston. As luck would have it, the Fore River drawbridge was up. When she finally crossed the river, she decided to take a cab from North Quincy to Boston.

"I knew if I had to park the car I would never make the gallery opening in time," Burke said. The gallery was slated to open its doors at 10:30. The cab dropped her off at 10:20.

When she arrived, the media descended on her. When they demanded a statement, she quoted G.K. Chesterton.

"God always forgives. Man sometimes forgives. Nature never forgives."

Then she added, "Robert Mapplethorpe died of AIDS. What more can I say?"

The television reporters followed her around the gallery with their "live action cameras." Burke decided she give the main exhibit a cursory look, head to the area where the infamous photographs were displayed and get out.

Burke regrets not spending more time looking at the exhibit. She said if she had taken more time, she would have found more photographs to put on her undesirable list.

She found the long lines of people waiting to see the exhibit dismaying. It depressed her "to see all these people being seduced into this exhibit."

The low point in the media coverage of the Mapplethorpe controversy for Burke personally was the coverage in the Herald after the opening.

Rita Burke

In addition to what she considers a less than flattering photograph on the front page, columnist Margery Eagan slightly distorted a comment she made. Howie Carr picked up on it and it was bandied about on Jerry Williams' radio talk show.

Burke believes Mapplethorpe intentionally created the objectionable images and included them in his plans for a retrospective. She said the director of the gallery, David Roth, told her early on in the controversy, "This is activity that he enjoyed. That is why he wanted to reproduce it."

The Cincinnati chief of police who brought obscenity charges against the exhibit and the gallery director there told Burke that Mapplethorpe's writings reveal that he considered the homoerotic and sadomasochistic photographs his legacy to his lifestyle.

Recently Burke was the recipient of a packet of photographs from the Emperor's New Clothes exhibit. They invited her to write her reactions to the photographs for inclusion in the exhibit.

The packet included photographs used in jeans, perfume and underwear advertisements, one of Mapplethorpe's photographs entitled Man in the Polyester Suit, and a series of photographs from "adult" magazines.

The last photograph showed a woman being mutilated and tortured with needles.

Burke does not believe censoring these kinds of photographs violates the First Amendment.

"There are still people who think this is a travesty of our first amendment," she said.

Rita Burke ...

According to her religious education, putting yourself in that position was called "an occasion of sin," and it constituted a serious offense against God.

There was more emphasis on personal conduct.

"Sitting for hours idly wasn't done," Burke said. "Life was serious, not frivolous."

The world is a very different place today.

She accuses public schools of teaching sex education in a value-neutral or valueless manner.

Never have our children known so much about sex education, she said, and look at the rates of teenage pregnancy and sexually transmitted diseases.

"Even in math when teaching percentages, they utilize abortion figures," she complained. "That's how subtle it is. They make it like breathing in and out."

Burke doesn't mince words about abortion. Not only does it violate her religious convictions, she believes it threatens society.

"Abortion has bred weak people. We are looking for strong, courageous people to lead and set good examples for our young people today," Burke said.

She has mixed feelings about birth control. She opposes artificial contraception, but believes natural family planning is acceptable. Then she wonders which one of her seven children she wouldn't have if she had practiced natural family planning and is horrified.

Even when the educational establishment isn't dealing in sex education and values clarification, Burke finds fault.

The concentration on environmental issues and nuclear power merely frightens children needlessly, she said. Textbooks distort history by glossing over the important things and giving an undue amount of coverage to the merely frivolous. She gave as an example the likelihood that a textbook might have a half page on George Washington and go on for three pages about Marilyn Monroe or some other celebrity.

To deal with the threat she saw from secular humanism and the equal rights amendment, she founded the Pro-Family Forum and became a member of Phyllis Schlafly's Eagle Forum.

The pro-family group meets monthly in her living room.

"We don't stop for anything," Burke said. Members of the group cull their sources, picking out anything they think will affect the family. Candidates for public office are invited to speak to the group and many of the members were delegates to the recent state Republican convention.

Becoming active politically brought her into the public eye. Although she described herself as an essentially private person, it didn't faze her in the least.

"I've never been shy about letting people know where I stood on things," Burke said. Perhaps that is because she has the courage of her convictions.

"I always go back to a religious basis for my thinking," she said. She lives and acts with the firm belief that not only is there a God, but that she will have to make an accounting to him for what she has done with her time and the advantages she has had.

Recently Burke heard a nun with a mission in Africa talking about the challenges she faces. Half the children served by the mission do not live past the age of five. The nun told the congregation there is never enough food and the heat and flies are atrocious.

"Their life is just a constant battle for survival," Burke said. "How much more the Lord is going to expect of me."

Life has not been an unending bed of roses for Burke. One of her daughters died of cancer in 1968. Another daughter underwent surgery for a brain tumor in January 1988 and still another was diagnosed with a brain tumor in 1989 and had surgery in June of that year.

The recovery has been long. Faith sustains Burke. That and her husband, Thomas, with whom she is obviously deeply in love. She met Thomas on an airplane and they married in October 1947. She jokes that God and American Airlines brought them together.

Even with all of her outside activities, two of them make time for each other. They particularly enjoy playing golf.

"He's the good one," Burke said. "He practices."

She also makes space in her life for music and gardening. She sings in the choir, is a member of a choral group and plays piano. Her garden is a harmonious riot of color and scent. Roses are a particular favorite.

If you had to sum Rita Burke up, you couldn't go wrong quoting her.

"I am not a fanatic, I am a concerned mother and grandmother," she said. "I believe the family is the basis of civilization."

And Burke believes in acting on her most deeply held beliefs.

Pitcher takes a swing

Boston Red Sox pitcher Dennis Lamp will participate in this year's "Lou Bailey Golf Outing" at Cohasset Golf Club, September 6.

Lamp, a Cohasset resident, will take part in the annual fundraiser to benefit the South Shore Association for Retarded Citizens.

The golf tournament will be followed by a dinner-dance, also at the Cohasset Golf Club.

The golf tournament is limited to a select number of players who will compete for prizes. One individual will win a round-trip vacation package for two to the St. Simons Island Resort off the coast of Georgia

Space at the dinner is still available and a few slots in the golf tournament are still open. The public is invited to join in either or both the golf tournament and the dinner-dance. Individuals may reserve space or obtain additional information from the South Shore ARC Development Office at 335-3023.

A whale of a fish story at tournament

By David McKee
Mariner staff

Richard Knapp, 15, and his friends David Nothnagle and Tyler Studds, both 14, did not know what to expect as they entered their first fishing tournament, the Cohasset Yacht Club Annual Blue Fishing Tournament on August 4.

"We were really surprised when we got there," Knapp said. "We came out for the tourney with this 13-foot Whaler and just about everyone else had these big boats with all this fancy equipment. But we still managed to win the thing."

Knapp, Nothnagle and Studds, despite their youth, inexperience and inferior equipment surprised everyone by hauling in a 22 pound, 38.5 inch Blue Fish. The fish won the title of "Biggest Fish" and the boys brought home a trophy in their first outing.

"It was great winning the tournament," Knapp said "When I pulled it in, I thought it was a good sized fish. But I had no idea it would win the tourney."

The tournament got underway at 5:30 a.m. on a hot and calm Saturday and lasted until noon.

"We got out there at about 5:30 with everyone else," Knapp said. "But we didn't catch the fish until 8:45. And it turned out it was the only fish we caught all day."

Knapp was fishing on one of the two lines when the fish struck.

"It put up a great fight. Bluefish are always good fighters," he said. "I'd say the fight lasted about eight minutes or so."

They pulled in the fish and finished out the tourney. And after all the boats had returned and all the fish weighed, the boys were crowned champs.

Their fish is now entered into the Massachusetts Blue Fish Tourney in the junior division.

"Not too bad for our first tourney," Knapp said.

Knapp, who will be a sophomore at the Groton School in Groton, Massachusetts this fall, said he enjoys fishing and tries to get out two to three times a week during the summer.

"I get out as often as I can in the summer and I like fishing with David and Tyler. We all usually go out together."

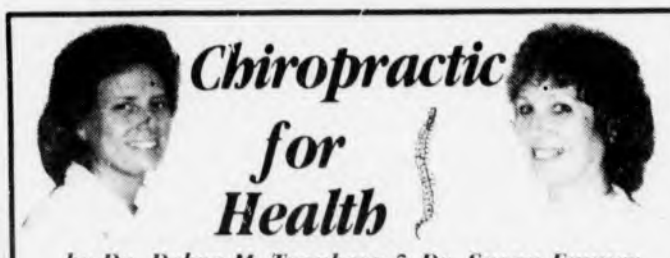
When they fish, they usually look to hook Bluefish or Stripped Bass.

"Those are the fish we go for because they are the only ones around here," Knapp said.

Asked if he's ever caught a bigger Blue Fish out with his buddies, he replied no.

As for catching a bigger Stripped Bass, he laughed, "I've never reeled in one of those. I haven't had much luck."

The boys are keeping the trophy they won for their fish. As for the fish itself, "We are getting it stuffed and mounted," Knapp said. "There's talk that they might even put it up at the Yacht Club. That would be nice."



Richard Knapp, David Nothnagle and Tyler Studds display a 22 pound Blue Fish that took the "Biggest Fish Award" at the Cohasset Yacht Club's Annual Blue Fishing Tournament.

Chiropractic for Health

CRASH COURSE

When the head is snapped backward as the result of being rear-ended in an automobile collision, the neck experiences "whiplash." Actually, "whiplash" is the popular term for a cervical sprain with subluxation of one or more vertebrae. The result of this trauma may be residual pain and related problems. Not only is the spinal cord encased within the neck, but it is in close proximity to the brain, cervical nerves, blood vessels and muscles. If the trauma of "whiplash" extends to any of these other areas, it can produce a great many seemingly unrelated problems. That is why it is so important that the "whiplash" victim be examined by someone who understands the relationship between the delicate neck area and other body areas. Many times, the symptoms of "whiplash" are not "all in your head."

Chiropractic goes to the source of one's problem rather than merely dealing with the symptom. DR. DEBRA M. TRANBERG, SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, 80 Front St., Scituate, 545-7388, and DR. SUSAN EMMER, CHIROPRACTIC & FAMILY WELLNESS CARE, 87 Sohier St., Cohasset, 383-1330, urge a periodic chiropractic exam as a preventive measure as well as at times when it is necessary to deal with a specific discomfort. Chiropractic doesn't cost...it pays. By appointment. Workers Comp. cases and most insurance plans accepted.

P.S. The neck constitutes only three percent of body weight, yet must support a head weighing an average of 12 pounds.

First day jitters strike many youngsters

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

While most kids climb into their new duds, strap on the new backpack and head off to school as happy as the proverbial clam at high tide, some children come down with a major case of the first day jitters.

This is most common for kindergartners facing life without Mom and children moving into a new school, but it can hit children in any grade and in any circumstance.

One of Cohasset's favorite kindergarten teachers, Marie Price, knows a lot about first day jitters.

Children worry whether they will be able to find their classroom. They worry about finding the bathrooms. They wonder if they will remember which door is their door.

"They see so many doors," Price said.

The solution is easy.

"Bring your child to the school ahead of time," she said. Although Osgood has a "moving up" day, seven classrooms have been changed around since then, so a revisit will be helpful.

Since children want to know if their teacher will like them, Price suggests bringing the child to school ahead of time may ease their mind.

Children with older brothers and sisters may also worry about "the principal's office." They will also be meeting lots of strangers — nurses, librarians, classroom aides and secretaries. They need to know that their school is a friendly place filled with people who care about them.

Price also wants children to know that teachers are wondering if their new students will like them, too.

Children need to know it is okay to be nervous and it is okay to cry, Price said.

Another fear surrounds the issue of getting to school and getting back home.

Price suggested walking or driving the route your child will take and helping them identify landmarks. Reassure them that the adults on the bus will help them get off in the right place. Parent monitors ride the buses in Cohasset to keep an eye on the little ones.

Children feel more secure when they know their address. If your child cannot master the complete address, teach them the street name at a minimum.

Children also worry about Mom — will she be home when they get home, what will she do all day while they are gone.

Price says it helps if a parent or caretaker can take the time to listen to a child tell about their day as soon as they get home.

She also advises using open-ended questions. If you ask "Did you have a good?", you will probably get a yes or no answer, Price said. She suggests saying things like "tell me about your day" or "what was the best thing that happened today" instead.

Another conversation-opener is the paperwork and art your child brings home. Price said parents should not say "what is it?" or "what a nice . . ." Educational experts say you should say "tell me about your drawing."

That way, Price said, you will never make the mistake of admiring what you think is a tree and turns out to be a house.

Displaying a child's work on the refrigerator or family bulletin board also encourages positive feelings about school and about themselves.

The best thing you can do to ease your child's worries is to share your experiences. Talking about a time when you were nervous is reassuring.

Reading books about starting school is another important thing parents can do.

The children's librarian at Paul Pratt Memorial Library can help you choose the right book. Titles are available for children from kindergarten on up.

It also helps if you let a child pick out that back-to-school outfit, Price said.

"Or encourage them to like what you already bought," she adds.

Keep in mind that your child may be too nervous to eat before school those first few days. An after school snack may be perfect to fill up an empty tummy and create a cozy time to share the news about what you both did all day.

Cohasset does well in truancy report

The state Education Department compared truancy rates for the first time ever and found Cohasset students do well.

The truancy rates show "cause for concern" in urban high schools and among certain minority students.

According to the report, released this month, the average attendance rate for students in public schools in this state was 92.5 percent during the 1987-88 school year.

Cohasset students, however, rated 95.7 percent on overall attendance. That breaks down to 96.2 for elementary and 95 for high school students.

In the school year analyzed the average daily attendance in Cohasset was 1,322 students. There were 1,381 enrolled students, by way of comparison.

There were 25 truants that year, which amounts to 2.2 percent of the high school population. There were no elementary school truants.

"A high attendance rate suggests that a school's policies, programs and procedures regularly engage its students," said State Education Commissioner Harold Raynolds Jr.

"A vicious cycle begins with low attendance. Grades suffer, more absences can ensue and eventually dropout rates may increase.

"We have to look at attendence and truancy figures when we're judging the effectiveness of a school and how students are achieving. While some students may be truant for personal reasons, most of them stay out of school when they feel the cost of attending outweighs the benefits."

According to studies cited in the report, most students say they were truant because of academic failures, frustrated by overcrowded conditions, anxious over racial tension, afraid of physical harm or simply bored.

Swim team caps winning season

By Linda Henderson
Special to the Mariner

At an awards ceremony capping its second undefeated season in a row and its second consecutive South Shore League Championships, the Cohasset Swim Team announced the following awards. Awards are based on first second and third place finishes throughout the season.

Diving Coach, Jane deLima and Swim Coaches, Kate Anderson and Sara Tague all spoke with affection and enthusiasm of their teams' performances throughout the summer. The diving team, too, was undefeated, having captured seven out of eight possible first places. In the 16 and under category Kate deLima was first and in the 12 and under age group, Dawn Meehan was first and Catie Campbell was second. The Coach's trophy was awarded to Dawn Meehan, and Bobby Meehan was the Most Dedicated Diver. Cere Osterborg was Unsung Hero and Kate deLima and Catie Campbell were the Most Improved Divers.

First place trophies were awarded to the following swimmers:

16 and under: Boys, Topher Henderson; Girls, Niffy Jackson.

14 and under: Boys, Dave Leahy; Girls, Tina Rousseau.

12 and under: Boys, Tom Greco; Girls, Heather Littlehale.

10 and under: Boys, Greg Bitton; Girls, Maren Cameron.

8 and under: Boys, Justin Cullivan; Girls, Sarah Chin.

Second place trophies were awarded to:

16 and under: Boys, Chip Anderson; Girls, Maureen Long.

14 and under: Boys, Chris Kondrat; Girls, Kate deLima.

12 and under: Boys, Rick Hawks; Girls, Lauren deVito.

10 and under: Boys, Derek Bugley; Girls, Katy Devine.

8 and under: Boys, Peter Minnar; Girls, Carolyn Cameron.

Third place trophy winners were:

16 and under: Boys, John Brister; Girls, Maria Kierce.

14 and under: Boys, Tim Brister; Girls, Megan Staunton.

12 and under: Boys, Justin Buckley; Girls, Hillary Strong.

10 and under: Boys, Patrick Leahy; Girls, Cara McKenney.

8 and under: Boys, Andrew McAuliffe; Girls, Sarah Senechal.

Most Improved Swimmer Awards were given to: Gemma O'Brien, Ryan O'Hart, Maura McLeod, Michael O'Hart, Kerry O'Hart, Burke Davis, Brooke Sheerin and Scott Theriault.

Several special awards were announced as well. The Mark Delaney Award, given in memory of a well-loved member of the Swim Team, went to Tina Rousseau for her "quiet leadership, dedication and natural love of swimming."

The Coaches' Trophies were awarded to Becky Golden and Bobby Meehan for their helpfulness.

The Most Dedicated Swimmer Award went to Emily Henderson for her hard work and love of swimming. The rookies of the year were Leah Kisiel and Taylor Devin.

The Unsung Heroes were Ashley Brister and Rob Davis.

The Bancroft Trophy is awarded to a person who in the opinion of the lifeguards provides help and leadership around the pool, and this year's awards went to Abbie White and Chris Kondrat.

Last of all, mention was made of those swimmers for whom this year was their last on the team. Niffy Jackson began swimming on the team when she was four years old, and in her thirteen years on the team contributed many, many points to Cohasset victories. It soon became a foregone conclusion that when Niffy swam for Cohasset, she would finish first. Close behind, with eleven years on the team was Topher Henderson, who in those years never missed a meet and who at the age of eight began swimming what Coach Kate Anderson described as his "phenomenal and unique butterfly". Maureen and Kay Long began swimming for Cohasset at seven, and as identical twins, kept scorers and timers constantly guessing! (Was it Kay? No, Maureen! No, Kay!) Maria Kierce, John Brister and John Kisiel, all more recent additions to the team, have all been valuable members and will be missed. And last of all, thanks to Rob Davis for bringing his 24 second 50 yard freestyle to Cohasset for this season.

Tara Gallagher participated recently in the Bay State Games.

Senate hopefuls

like one of my opponents. It's hard to get your message out."

But, says Flynn, "I'm going to spend whatever I can raise plus some of my own." He's hoping to budget at least $75,000 on the primary.

McDonald says he hasn't even settled on a budget yet.

"It's been a difficult year, partly due to the number of races and the number of candidates," he says. "You have people with Golden, Bellotti, various candidates for the rep seat, and the senate seat.

"Money is difficult to come by for someone like myself who doesn't have an extensive contributors' list developed over the years. The economy is slowing down, and people are tight with their dough, and I don't blame them. The economy has definitely had an impact," McDonald notes.

We don't have the financial capability of some others, so we're doing some things differently," says McDonald. For example, he expects to save about $2,000 silk-screening his own campaign signs with the help of volunteers.

But McDonald has other things besides politics on his mind: "After years of trying, my wife is expecting her first baby," he beams. "That's the big event around this house. The primary pales in comparison."

The baby is due Sept. 22, four days after the primary.

REPUBLICAN HOPEFULS

On the Republican side, Cohasset millionaire Christy Mihos is clearly best able to run a well-heeled campaign, though he promises not to spend his own money.

"Not a dime of my own money is in this campaign," says Mihos, president of the Christy's convenience store chain. He is loath to say how much he has raised, but admits to planning "extensive direct mail and a highly-visible media campaign" as well as "extensive polling."

Clearly, Mihos' opponents fear not just his personal wealth, but also his ability to call on other moneyed Republicans to chip in. Republican candidates in Massachusetts, Mihos' opponents moan, are always underfunded despite the public perception that Republicans are rich and Democrats poor.

How is he keeping interest alive? "We're having 20 coffees, three fundraisers, doing visibility stufff," he says. "I'm out every morning doing visibility, holding signs, and will be doing more door-to-door."

Mihos says more than 600 people gathered at the Barker Tavern for his campaign announcement, a crowd he found auspicious.

"It was crazy. It got so crowded that police were starting to ticket and demanding that people move their cars. The turnout was very encouraging."

Mihos finds campaigning "a lot of fun," and reports losing 14 pounds due to his "campaign diet" and marching in parades in 100-degree weather.

"The most encouraging part is the number of people willing to give up their night and weekends," he says. "It's heartening."

Voters he meets, Mihos says, "were initially angry at state government. Now the attitude is almost dread.

"People are re-registering at town halls in great numbers," he says. "It's electrifying." He says voters are not only changing from Independent to Republican, but from Democrat to Republican "more than I ever thought possible."

'PEOPLE ARE ANGRY'

"People are angry. You can see it in their eyes and hear it in their voices. They'll remember in November."

Not so sure of a Republican stampede is Robert Hedlund, Weymouth Republican who, like many other candidates this year, is having some trouble raising money and hence, is having problems gaining name recognition.

"Some Republicans sit on their assets on Jerusalem Road and wonder why we shoot ourselves in the foot every election," says Hedlund. "I'm the only Republican candidate, it seems, who has to work for a living."

Hedlund runs Hedlund Motors, a truck repair shop in Weymouth.

Like Flynn on the Democratic side, Hedlund wants more pre-primary debates to help him deliver his message and let GOP voters compare candidates. Like Flynn, he sent out letters seeking sponsors -- in his case, to Republican town committees. And, like Flynn, he was ignored.

"They just don't seem interested in getting involved," a lack of reaction somewhat surprising, perhaps, given that Hedlund is former chairman of the state Young Republicans.

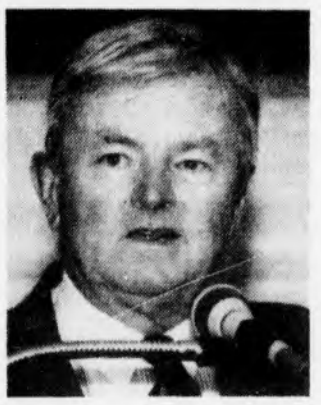
Hedlund also shares an issue with Flynn, though he takes umbrage at the comparison. He, too, is accused to carpetbagging for moving from Hull to Weymouth.

"It's unfair to assign me a carpetbagger label," Hedlund explains. "Being single, I've moved around quite a bit within this district. I was brought up in Hingham, and went to Hingham Schools. I was out on my own at age 18, and lived in a $125 a month flea trap in the 'Gulch' in Hingham. Then I bought a condo in South Weymouth. Later, I sold that and moved to Hull. Then, in the fall of 1989, I moved to East Weymouth, but I've owned the house since 1985. I bought it with a friend who later got married. When he moved out, I moved in."

"Raising children was never enough, I was always involved," Burke said.

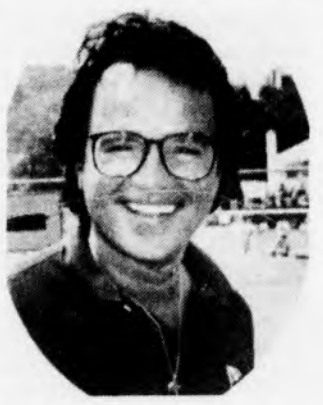
Trying to raise healthy, responsible children in the face of a society that pushed other choices at them led Burke to action. She sees forces at work that undermine the family and the values that she believes promote strong families and responsible individuals.

Some of the forces she sees as undermining good, strong families and secure women are secular humanism, feminism and abortion.



"We are knee deep in secular humanism," Burke said. She sees its influence everywhere. Even her beloved church has not been immune, she admits.

Secular humanism and the values clarification techniques of Sidney Simon have crept into the religious education curriculum, she said. She holds the church to a uniquely high standard because of the role she sees the church playing in society.



"Really, one of the main reasons for the decay in society is the Catholic Church has become weak," Burke said. She was taught and believes that "the Catholic Church is the one true Church. When it loses its soul, then civilization will fall."

She looks back at her Catholic upbringing. She graduated from an all-girls Catholic college in 1945. Until recently, not a single girl she went to college with had been divorced and they all had large families. Growing up she never knew anyone who was divorced, never knew about abortion or homosexuality.

In her day, girls were taught to avoid situations and places where they might be taken advantage of.

'TRADITIONAL CAMPAIGN

How does Hedlund expect to win? "We're working as hard a traditional campaign as we have resources to handle. We're also doing some novel things I'm not going to disclose. We can't do as much as we wanted due to resources, but we'll be quite effective."

Hedlund won't say how much he expects to spend, though "I'll spend a lot less than my competition," he says. "I'll be in the same league as Flynn and McDonald, not as Hussey and not as Mihos. But we'll offset spending with a number of dedicated volunteers and hard work."

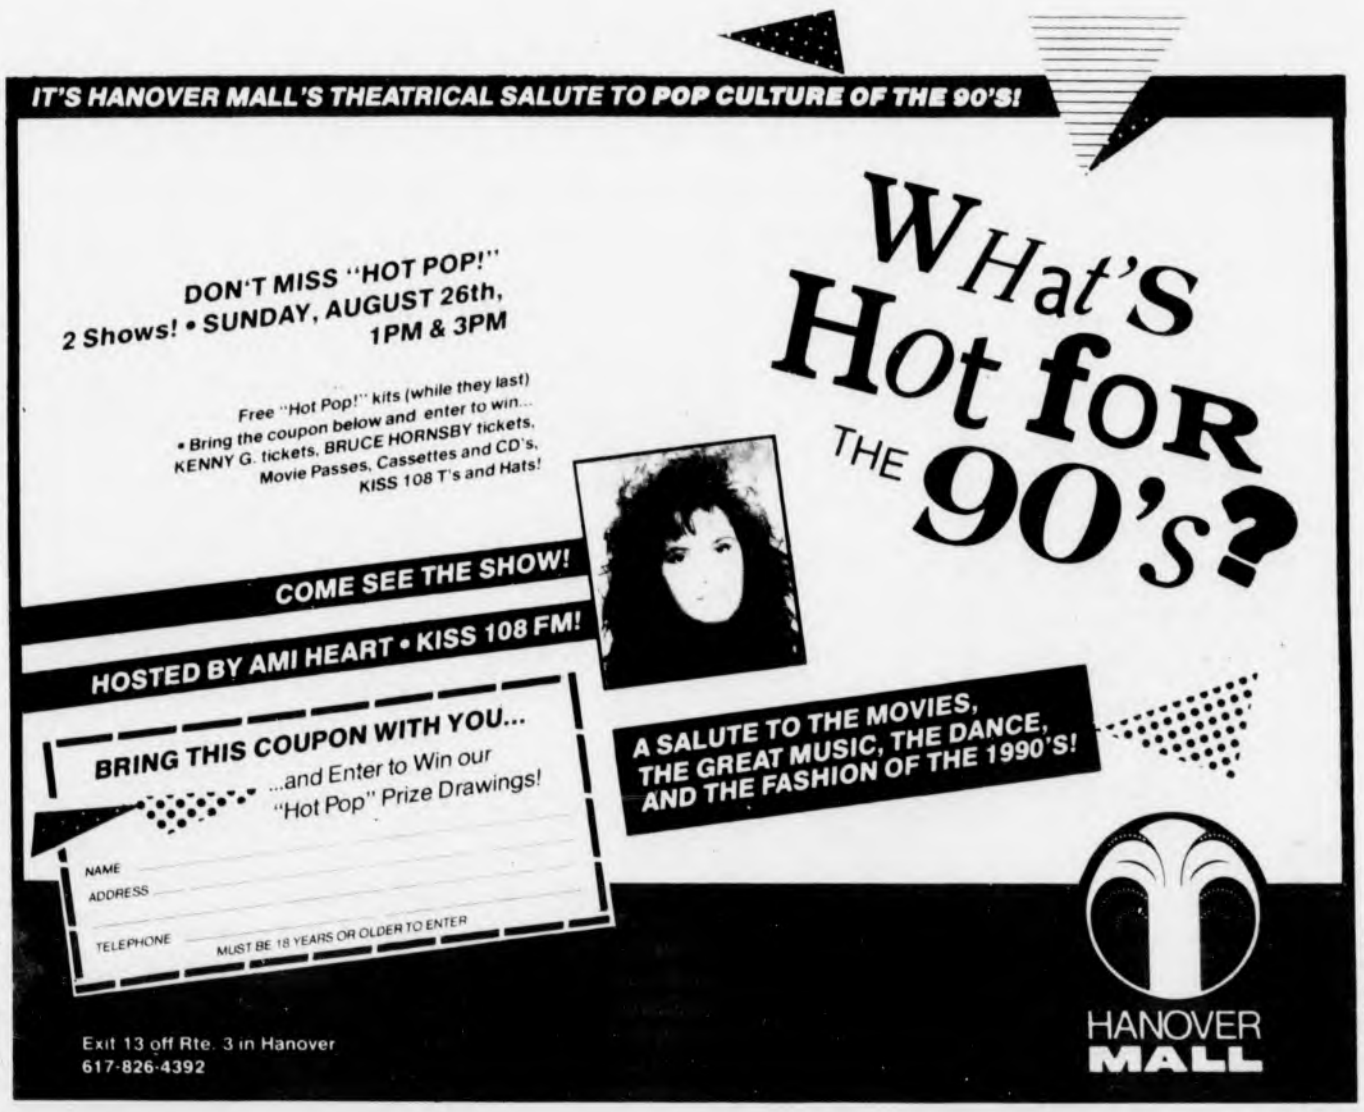
Like Creed, Hedlund is running a do-it-yourself campaign that assumes a candidate can overcome money with sweat.

Hedlund says he's done one mailing and is still getting responses. He hasn't the money for polling, "but I've talked with some people who have done polling, and they've given me some information," he says. "We'll have some unique ads coming, different from the rest."

Evidently different from the rest is Don Hussey, Hingham Republican, who expects to spend $60,000 on the primary -- not in the same league as Ambler, but then, he isn't facing Ambler in the primary.

Hussey says he is engaged in "good, old-fashioned American politics," knocking on doors (3,000 so far), sending letters, attending events and stressing his business background.

When you have run your own business, says Hussey, "you have to meet a payroll. There's no tax base to fall back on. You have to do it yourself."



HIGH-TECH REPUBLICAN

Hussey claims to be running 'a grassroots campaign" with "a whole gang" of volunteers. Yet he is perhaps the best organized, high-tech Republican in the race.

He's had two mass mailings so far, sends personalized letters thanking those he meets and massaging those he hasn't, and has computerized his operation to an impressive degree.

Howard Hay, his campaign manager, admits that Hussey has computerized the entire Norfolk-Plymouth District, through the Republican State

Drains Run Slow?

You'll never have a slow running, or clogged drain again! The secret? Clean drains don't run slow.

Slow drains, or periodic clogs, are SIGNALS that a thick layer of GOOK is choking your pipes. Grease, hair, and other waste stick to your pipes, with every use. This gook deposits along the entire length of the pipe. It chokes your pipes gradually, as it gets thicker and thicker.

Conventional drain openers can't fix slow drains. They react chemically on the surface of the gook. To be effective, they must remain in contact with the waste. Even a small tunnel through the gook lets them flow out to the sewer, leaving the gook behind.

In the past, the only way to remove this build-up was to rooter your pipes. An expensive, temporary measure.

Now, with just a few minutes each month, you can easily clean out your pipes... and KEEP them clean with Plumb Clean. Its totally unique formula clings, and penetrates deep into the gook. That is what allows it to liquefy even years of build-up. Plumb Clean will clean the entire length of your pipes. It will make your drains run like new, when used as directed. This penetrating action is so revolutionary, we stand behind Plumb Clean with a money-back guarantee!

Saves Money. A 1 lb. container of Plumb Clean holds up to 41 drain treatments. Even if drain openers could fix slow drains, it would take over 10 quart bottles to get the same number of treatments. Plumb Clean costs about 35¢ per treatment. We don't know of anything that cleans drains for less.

Safe Too. Conventional drain openers are dangerous chemicals. They can injure eyes on contact. They can release deadly vapors, in some situations. Some may damage your fixtures. Plumb Clean will not burn skin, or eyes. It will not release harmful fumes. When used as directed, it is 100% safe for people, and of course, all plumbing.

So, if your drains are giving you a SIGNAL, act now. Get safe, guaranteed Plumb Clean today!

Seven candidates risk it all

Seven men who would be state senator are giving their all -- and in some cases, risking their futures -- in a contest sure to be remembered in South Shore towns as a classic.

Why? To join the exclusive Massachusetts Senate club? To wield political power at the State House and influence at home? To position themselves for a run at Congress? To satisfy the political virus that infects their souls? To prove to themselves that they are popular? To gain some sort of immortality? To satisfy their own psychological uncertainties? To prove something, anything?

And why spend so much money -- political spending for the primary may reach a half million dollars -- to win a seat that pays $30,000?

Well, for starters, candidates don't usually spend their own money: they raise it through donations. And they aren't usually running for the money the job pays. They want the power, public recognition, the authority to carry out whatever agenda they espouse.

Why so many candidates? Because the seat is open, without an incumbent to wrestle. State senate seats don't open up all that often; when one does, the ambitious gather around the empty chair and wait for the music to begin.

Why else would Bill Flynn, a 15-year state rep, risk it all? And if he wanted to be in the Senate, why move from Hanover to Weymouth? Why not just run against Sen. Michael Creedon, who represents Hanover? Simple: Flynn couldn't beat him. Fellow-Democrat Creedon is an incumbent, and he's from Brockton, where a single precinct has more voters than the whole town of Hanover. Does the move to Weymouth make Flynn an opportunist? Sure; along with every other politician who ever lived.

And why would Bob Ambler, after 26 years representing Weymouth in the House, opt for a Senate bid? Clearly, he's in bad odor with the present leadership, Keverian & Co., having been steadfast in support of his mentor, Tom McGee, whom Keverian ousted as speaker in the famous palace coup. But Keverian won't be there next year, having chosen to run for state treasurer. And why run for Senate after all these years in the House? As Ambler notes, he's 63 years old and has grandchildren to spoil. But politics is in Ambler's blood. Maybe, like the old fire-horse, he just can't help himself.

And what of Brian McDonald, the Weymouth selectman, an up-and-coming political figure who could more easily have stayed on familiar turf and run for Ambler's open House seat.

(See page 23)

Senate hopefuls

Committee and NYNEX.

"In the old days," says Hay, "you had to type in the information, or scan it, and match up the names with telephone numbers."

Hussey, however, secured telephone numbers on computer disks and has what Hay calls a "fantastic" computer program that allows targeting of voters -- frequent voters, voters by occupation, or whatever.

"The Democrats, he says, are not at that stage" of sophistication, despite Democratic State Chairman Chester Atkins' incessant fundraising. "The Democrats still offer candidates the old paper voters' lists," Hay gloats.

"The old-time approach impresses people," Hay says 'It's brought in a lot of volunteers."

Hay clearly relishes the idea of a rematch with Ambler, his nemesis in 1984. "We're old friends," says he. "Ambler has so much baggage that we'd really prefer him to be the opponent in November."

EARLY DEADLINE!

Risking it all

Conventional wisdom holds that McDonald, friend and adherent of Bill Golden, thought Golden would enjoy a cake-walk into the lieutenant governor's nomination. That would have left hundreds of Golden supporters with nothing to do but pass out McDonald bumper stickers all summer. But 'twas not to be: Marjorie Clapprood is not the shy and retiring type (nor is Nick Paleologos), and Golden is getting a run for his money, giving his supporters (and contributors) plenty to do. Why does McDonald run? Maybe because he's decided it's time to move up or out.

And John Creed? Why would a gentlemanly former Catholic priest join the political fray? Creed started out as the pro-life candidate, but now is stressing education as his raison d'etre, perhaps because "pro-life doesn't come up as much as I thought it would" in talking with voters. He evidently thinks a senate seat can be won from a kitchen-table campaign, safe in the belief that "I'm the best candidate." But he admits he recognizes political reality.

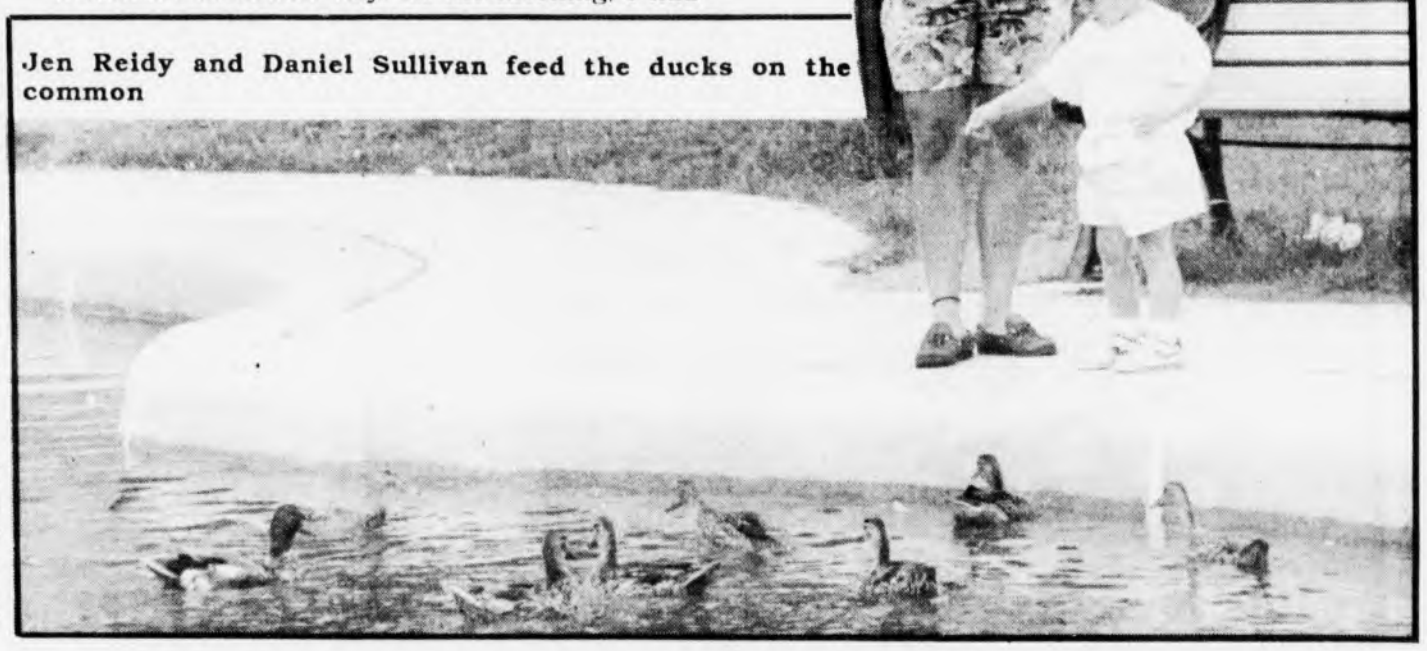
In some cases, perhaps, an open Senate seat seemed like a golden opportunity a year ago; perhaps less so now.

And what of the GOP?

Here we have Christy Mihos, Cohasset millionaire, president of Christy's markets, friend and ally of Republican worthies. Is he bored with retail and ready to solve all the world's problems now that he's reached the ripe old age of 40? Or does he see himself as the GOP's best hope for regaining Newland Holmes' and Bill Weeks' old seat -- occupied by Democrats for the past 20 years?

And Don Hussey, Hingham businessman and former schoolteacher, who'd like to spend $60,000 on the primary, but doesn't quite know how he'll get it. Why does he bother? Is he willing to mortgage his house and his future just so Republicans will have enough votes to demand a Senate rollcall? Would he have stayed out if he had known Mihos was getting in?

And Robert Hedlund, former Young Republicans chairman, Weymouth businessman, property owner, grandson of well-liked restauranteur Joe Sarni, and landlord of New England Telephone's local office. Hasn't he enough to keep him occupied?



Hedlund resigned the Young Republicans seat on Valentine's Day this year.

"It was a memorable day. In the morning, I had breakfast with Dukakis and that afternoon, I quit as Young Republicans chairman."

Cause and effect? Does breakfast with Dukakis drive otherwise quiet citizens to give up everything and run for office themselves?

"Well, maybe a little," he laughs.

EPA wants more study on impact of the Old Colony RR line

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

Once again the MBTA's Draft Environmental Impact Statement for the Old Colony Railroad has fallen under scrutiny, this time by the Environmental Protection Agency.

In a letter sent to the Urban Mass Transportation Administration, and distributed to several other agencies, Elizabeth Higgins Congram, assistant director for environmental review, criticized the report as being inadequate, and gave it an EPA rating of EC-2, an indication that there are environmental concerns and insufficient information.

"The project's impacts, both temporary and permanent, to water resources (including the Plymouth-Carver Sole Source Aquifer, waterways and wetlands) have yet to be satisfactorily assessed," Congram wrote.

"In our opinion the DEIS does not provide sufficient information to allow the EPA to make a preliminary finding of the project's compliance with the EPA's guidelines under Section 404 of the Clean Water Act."

The draft's methodology for determining air quality is also criticized and considered "not appropriate."

WATER RESOURCES

The letter indicated the EPA has determined the DEIS does not adequately address the project's potential to affect water resources.

"The document does not assess whether or not specific water resources would actually be subjected to degradation or contamination as a result of railroad activities," Congram wrote.

The EPA recommended that the final draft statement present "all findings regarding whether or not runoff from each station site would carry pollutants into drinking water resources."

The EPA is also pushing for a definition of the proposed "internal drainage system" for rail stations and parking lots.

This internal drainage system would protect wetlands, waterways and wellfields from runoff pollutants.

The EPA is not sure this drainage system would fit the bill.

"The internal drainage system as currently discussed does not appear to be a 'closed' drainage system where all runoff could be collected and diverted to an alternative discharge location," Congram wrote.

The EPA recommended the use of a "closed" system to protect "sensitive water resources."

All specific contaminants likely to be found in "railbed pollutants" and their average concentration are to be identified.

A "quantitative and qualitative assessment of railbed pollutants" is called for to replace the "general statements" in the DEIS.

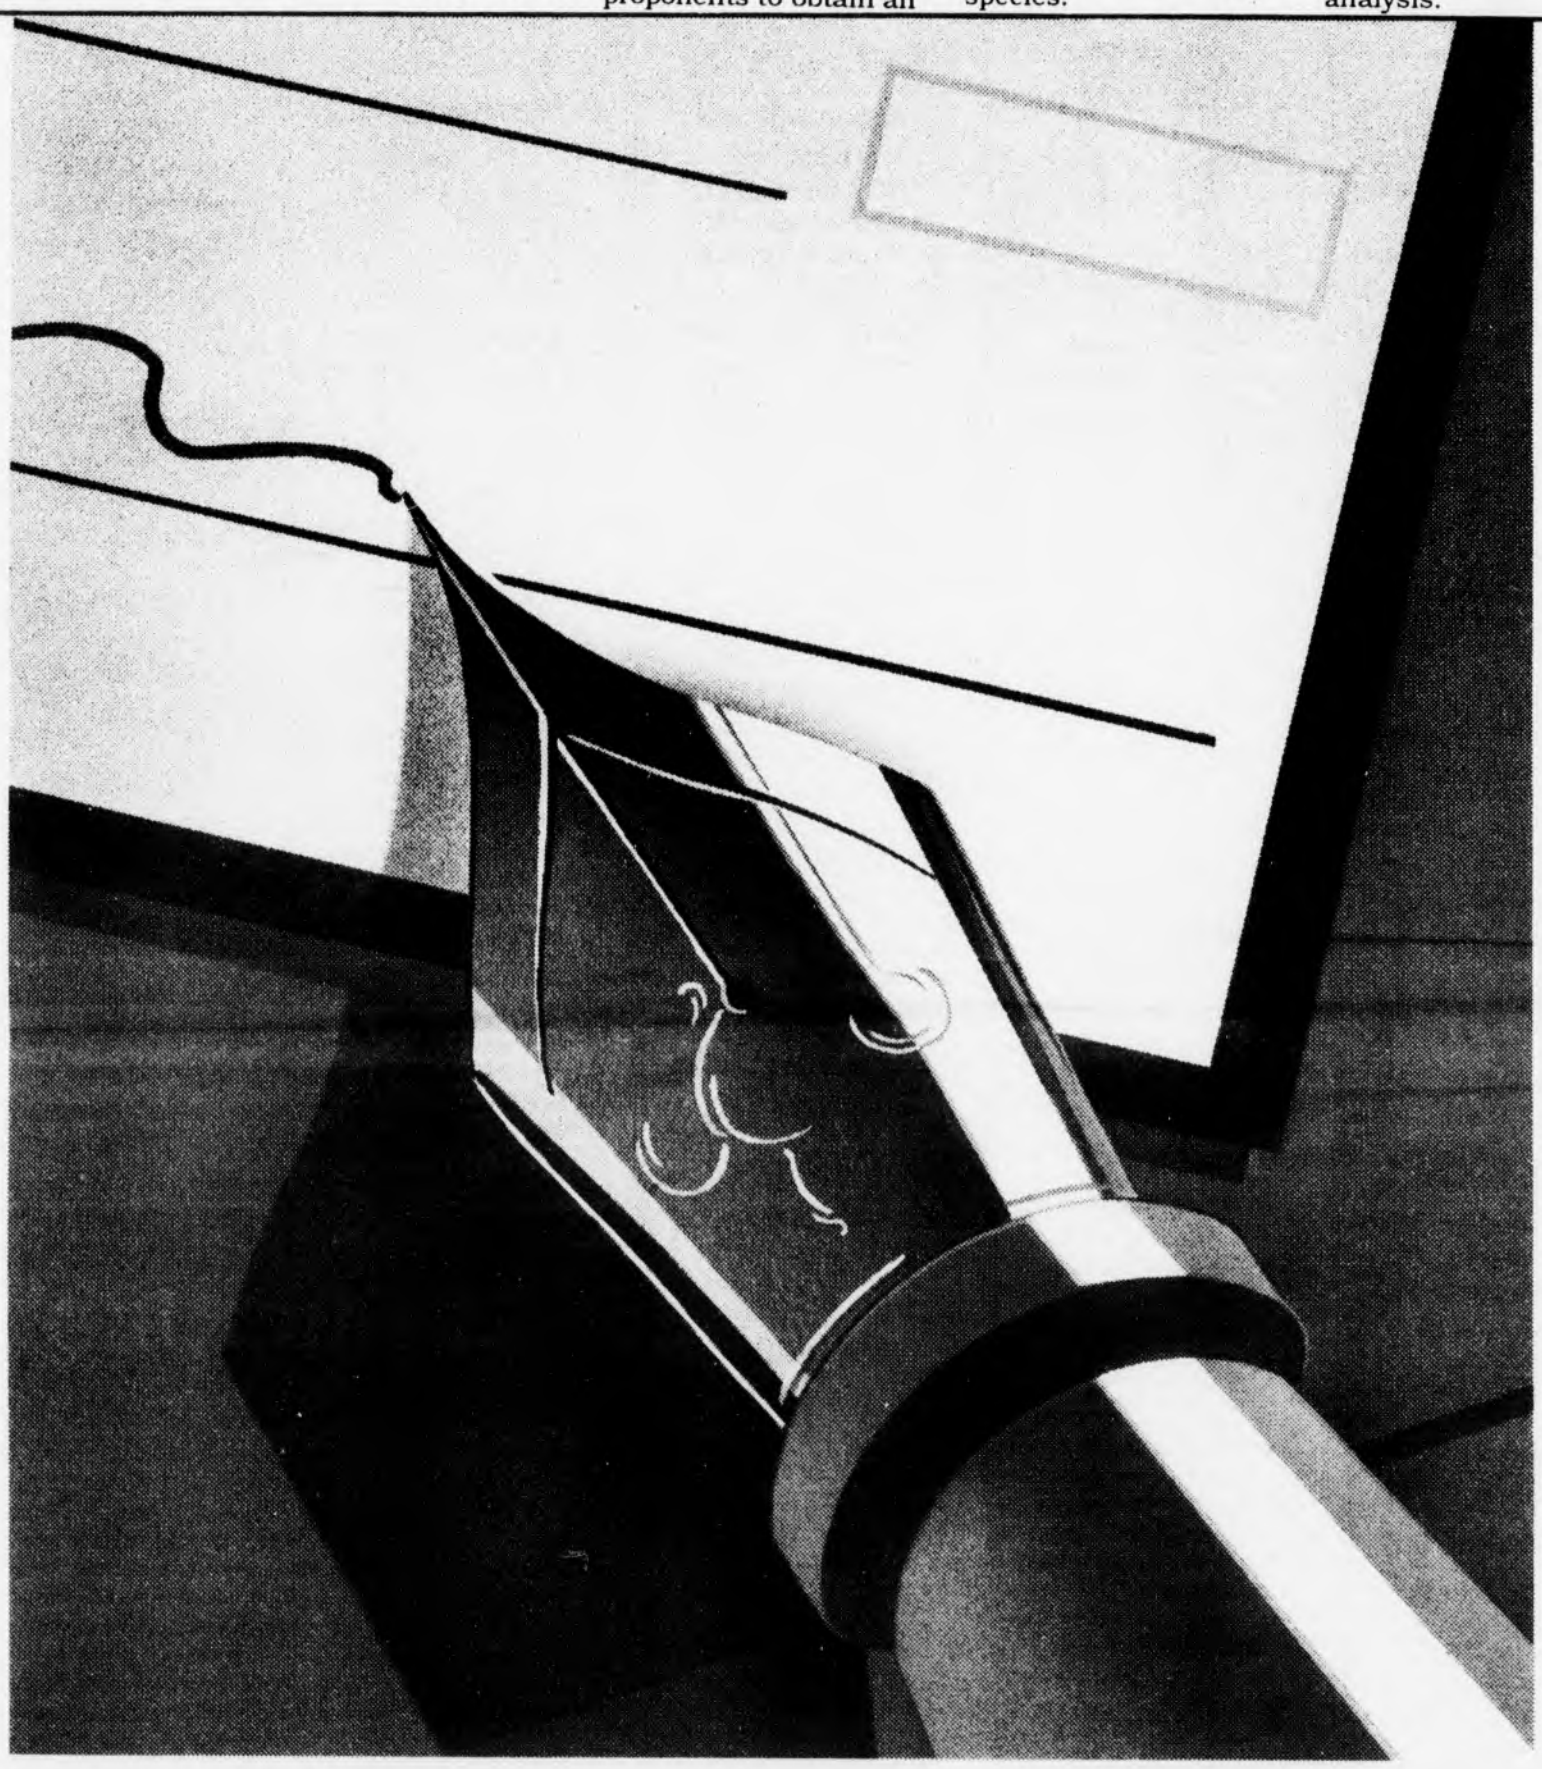
The EPA requested further documentation of the effectiveness of drainage systems to filter out pollutants, and handle heavy runoff and floodwaters.

"The (final impact statement) should demonstrate the level of benefit mitigation measures (or the success of similar measures) are likely to provide, rather than make general assumptions that they will work," Congram wrote.

The EPA also requested that the final impact statement "indicate the areas in the project area where herbicide applications would be prohibited to protect water resources, especially existing and future drinking water supplies."

The EPA strongly urged the mechanical removal of vegetation along the rights-of-way and stations.

Congram's letter notes a DEIS claim that eight wetland areas will be permanently affected by the project.



The EPA believes this will force the projects proponents to obtain an individual permit issued by the United States Army Corps of engineers under Section 404 of the Clean Water Act.

"The cornerstone of the guidelines...requires among other things that there must be no less damaging practical alternatives to wetland filling available," Congram wrote.

"The activity must not violate applicable quality standards or threaten an endangered species.

"Without additional detailed studies we cannot evaluate whether the impacts are significant or whether they have been avoided or minimized as required."

The EPA suggests that UMTA schedule a meeting with them and the Corps of Engineers to discuss wetland analyses, the projects 404 permit application and the necessary revisions to the air quality analysis.

Bubblicious enjoyment floated through the playground program recently thanks to the town's fire department.
(Photo by Ann Pompeo)

Private ambulance makes cents

The government structure committee has come up with a detailed plan to save the town money by getting out of the ambulance business.

The committee issued a 20 page report last week which shows how to save $89,580 to $139,580 by laying off the firefighters who man the town's ambulance and contracting with a private company for the service.

After 11 months of study, the committee came up with its recommendations which call for:

– the selectmen to enter into a private ambulance contract and eliminate eight positions from the fire department.

– the town accountant to audit the number of transport runs made by the town ambulance, billings and amounts collected for the years 1986 forward and make regular reports to the selectmen.

– selectmen study the use of call firefighters.

The report asks questions in different areas, criticizing the present level of emergency care available in Cohasset as well as calling for a better accounting of ambulance billing and collections.

There are 24 full-time firefighters plus the chief.

The report states the change would have little or no impact on the town's fire rating and thus little effect on fire insurance costs in town.

Under a subheading called "concerns" the report states:

"Cohasset is approximately 15-20 minutes from ıe nearest full care medical facility, South Shore ıospital in Weymouth.

"The town's emergency care is presently served by firefighters who have been trained as emergency medical technicians (EMT). However, EMTs are limited in the type of emergency medical care they can provide. They can apply bandages, CPR and other very basic emergency medical care. They cannot administer any drugs or advance life support treatment.

"Although the town authorized the purchase of a defibrillator in 1989, EMTs are only now being trained in its use.

"Voters at the 1990 town election rejected an override of $70,000 to purchase a new ambulance.

Aerial mosquito spray debate

State officials were warned against poisoning the town's water supply by a board of selectmen who held two emergency meetings in two days.

Tuesday night at the conclusion of the second meeting, selectmen decided that while there was no decision to be made on the issue of aerial spraying with maliathon, it would be a good idea to send a telegram immediately to some state official in charge of the planes stating that the town would take action if Lily Pond, the town's water supply, were sprayed.

Water Commissioner Ron Goodwin had already talked with state officials seeking exemptions for the town's watershed. He was told the spotter plane would see the water from the air and stop.

Waterways and coastlines in other communities had already been sprayed as the group discussed the problem — the spraying in those areas defied the state's own guidelines.

Both Monday and Tuesday selectmen met to discuss the spraying.

About 20 to 30 residents and officials of other town boards crowded into the small meeting room, which was standing room only both afternoons. Young children played in the corridor as the meeting played itself out.

While no formal votes were taken, the selectmen refused to accept responsibility for making a decision on the malathion spraying.

On Tuesday Town Counsel Richard Henderson pointed out that there is state law allowing the Department of Public Health to order aerial spraying.

He said the only way he hope to stop the spraying in court would be to argue using scientific merits that the danger of spraying was greater than the danger of not spraying.

Cohasset's week

News from 'The Troika'

The town's appointing authority, popularly known as the troika, met last Thursday to deal with several appointments.

Two members were added to the advisory committee. They are Michael Putziger and Roger Whitley.

Donald Zerendow was appointed to the personnel committee.

The meeting was the last for troika member Ray Kasperowicz, who is resigning from the advisory committee. Kasperowicz has served as chairman of that committee, thus winning his position on the appointing authority.

The other two members of the troika are William Weeks, town moderator, and Rocco Laugelle, chairman of the board of selectmen.

Ethics probe completed

Rocco Laugelle, chairman of the board of selectmen, said last week the investigation by the state ethics board into his actions is complete.

"You can say they were satisfied by my explanation," Laugelle said.

He was reluctant to comment further on the situation which only became public record because he announced the investigation was in process.

Laugelle has close relatives in various town departments. His brother is the tree and park superintendent. His son is a patrolman on the police department.

There have been charges of conflict of interest made in the past.

Humphreys joins Harvard

Cohasset resident Margaret Humphreys, M.D., Ph.D., has joined the internal medicine staff at Harvard Community Health Plan's (HCHP) new Quincy Health Center. She will be working at HCHP's Braintree Health Center until the Quincy Health Center opens in November.

Mosquito spraying debated

On Wednesday as the three chemically laden planes swept over the town, the state's guidelines were put somewhat aside. The spraying continued until about 9 a.m., an hour beyond the stated time period.

Selectmen told residents concerned about the spraying that it was just too late to do anything.

"I am not the one to be making any decision on spraying," Selectman Jane Goedecke said.

Peter Laugelle, tree and park superintendent, sat through both meetings answering questions.

However residents, including members of the board of health, were not satisfied that other means of killing the mosquitos would not be safer and more effective.

The following information was among the various handouts discussed.

FACT SHEET Aerial spraying of malathion/Human health risks of Eastern equine encephalitis (EEE) provided by the Coalition Against Aerial Spraying Pesticide.

Cautionary Note: Beware of the danger of allowing cost-benefit analysis to be the basis for determining unreasonable risk!

Possible approaches to dealing with EEE

1. DPH can simply do nothing, but suggest detailed precautions the public can take to avoid being bitten by mosquitoes.

2. Since the EEE risk period is usually very regular and confined to the last 2 weeks of August and first week in September, DPH can do everything possible to inform the public what they can and should do to avoid exposure to mosquitoes at this time. (Since the timing of any mosquito adulticide program is very critical, this year's approach by CPH and DEA is questionable. In a letter dated August 7, Dr. Van Dunn, Deputy Commissioner, stressed the urgency of action and states that the period of potential transmission to humans will begin in a few days and end in 7-10 days. All that has passed and if he's right the boy currently being observed for EEE symptoms indicates the crisis is upon us and their response too late.

4. DPH gets off their asses early following the advise of the EEE surveillance entomologist (we have some exceptionally good ones in this state), and they follow the monitoring closely. Any spraying should be done from the ground in the high risk areas using possibly Bt. i (Bacillus thuringensis, israelensis) for the destruction of larvae of the disease carrying mosquitoes. Because of its selective toxicity, Bt. i is almost harmless to anything but certain insects. Along with the above, a comprehensive public education program should also be provided.

5. If our public officials are really more concerned about the public than their political futures they can implement the following long term measures:

a. As suggested by Paul Debach in his book, Biological Control by Natural Enemies, one can displace the vector of disease mosquito with a non-vector one. Reference is made in his book to promising test trials substituting species of Aedes mosquitoes (the kind we have here)

b. Try releasing sterile males at critical breeding periods.

c. Employ a non-toxic surface film to the water to disrupt mosquito larval breathing.

d. Use phermone traps.

e. Alter existing habitats.

f. Study the migratory bird population to understand the full cycle of the EEE virus (I understand entomologists still have no idea how the virus over winters). With this information it might be possible to disrupt the cycle.

g. Introduce a mosquito eating fish like carnbusia.

Background: Malathion was developed by German scientists as a deadly nerve agent. In the 50's and 60's the US produced large quantities of malathion along with other nerve gases. As world resistance grew to the stockpiling of chemical weapons, the organophosphates quickly found their way into American back yards in the form of common household insecticides (sort of like how radioactive waste finds its way into the American home in the required smoke detectors)

Concerns:

1. In 1962 Rachel Carson in Silent Spring points out that "organophosphates have the power to produce lasting physical damage to nerve tissue and to induce mental disorder. To make matters worse malathion breaks down into its highly toxic byproducts, maloxan and isomalathion. Maloxan is 10,000 times more toxic than malathion.

2. In the 1960's Japan banned malathion after it was linked to 10,000 cases of myopia and blindness in children.

3. In 1981, the British journal Lancet revealed that malathion had been linked to "aplasmic anemia and acute leukemia in children.

4. In 1981, Dr. Melvin Reuber, consultant to EPA, an expert on liver tumors concluded malathion was a carcinogen. He was forced to resign, but his indictment of malathion has never been challenged on scientific grounds. In recent review tests run by the EPA, B6531 mice fed malathion showed statistically significant dose responsive increases in liver carcinomas and neoplastic nodules.

5. Ruth W. Shearer, Genetic toxicologist, in sworn testimony to the state of California in 1984 stated that "malathion is an inhibitor of the carcinogenic potential of polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons, components of automobile exhaust and city smog.

6. In a statement delivered in Sacramento, Cesar Chavez and the UFW declared that "Organophosphate pesticides have killed and poisoned more farm workers than any other class of agricultural chemicals" (Buzzworn: May/June 1990, II #3, 40-47)

7. In California, the only state which presently enforces mandatory reporting of occupational pesticides incidents, malathion was the third most common cause of pesticide illness from 1981-85

8. In the EPA's Guidance for the reregistration of pesticide products containing malathion as the active ingredient, malathion was reported to cause 5 times as many occupational illnesses than the average pesticide, and the principle source of poisoning risk for humans from malathion was spray drift.

9. In the EPA's review of Malathion as of May 1987, we find the following:

a. Highly toxic to aquatic invertebrates, non target terrestrial invertebrates, including bees, aquatic life stages of amphibians & bees, moderately toxic to birds and slightly toxic to fish. Normal use of malathion may pose significant risk to aquatic fauna.

b. More data is needed to assess the neurotoxic potential

c. There are significant gaps in the chronic toxicological data base for teratology, mutagenicity and reproductive studies

d. The agency is unable to assess the potential formalathion to contaminate groundwater because the environmental fate of malathion is largely uncharacterized. Preliminary data indicates it is very mobile in loamy soil.

h. The agency has reviewed data which indicates that malathion may cause adverse effects to chickens, as evidenced by enhanced embryo toxicity to reduced egg hatchability when ingested at relatively low dietary concentrations (1 to 10 ppm). Acute delayed neurotoxicity has been seen in hens and EPA has asked registrants to submit further testing.

PLEASE NOTE: THE EPA'S FULL REASSESSMENT OF THE DATA GAPS IN MALATHION SAFETY WILL NOT BE ISSUED BEFORE 1994

10. Under laboratory conditions, malathion's half life was found to be 4 months in water at a pH 6.1 (slightly acid) (Soil Sci Soc Am Proc. 1969, 33(2) 259-262).

11. Samual Epstein, Professor of Occupational and Environmental Medicine, University of Illinois, states in a letter to the editor of the Washington Post, July 15, 1981, that he is very much concerned that the subtle long term effects of malathion exposure can be substantial.

12. According to findings reviewed by Mary O'Brien of NCAP (Northwest Coalition for Alternatives to Pesticides) Feb. 1987, the lesson offered from the California studies is that broadcast spraying of malathion will always be indiscriminate in its effects and can be expected to disrupt normal checks and balances, eliminate beneficial populations and the program which until this year was only offered at campuses outside this state. The program has been in existence for 11 years. There are seven locations involved in the program — two in Pennsylvania, one each in New York, California, Maryland, Switzerland and the one at Wheaton College.

Jenkins whizzes through math

Lee Jenkins, Jessica's mother, said she was impressed by the amount of time the CTY program devotes to academics.

She said she saw the program as a way to help Jessica move at her own speed.

She pointed out that with the seven hours a day spent on mathematics over three weeks, Jessica had more actual math work than she would have experienced in a normal classroom with 45 minute classes for 180 days, given the fact that part of every period is spent on non-instructional items.

"We had never heard of the program before," Lee explained.

Johns Hopkins uses the grade 6 scores on the national SRA tests to invite students to try their ability at the college boards in grade 7. The cutoff on SRA's is the 97th percentile.

Jessica decided to try and last January she took the Scholastic Aptitude Tests, scoring 480 in the verbal portion and 580 in math.

To qualify for the CTY program, Jessica was required to score 430 in the verbal test and 500 in math.

The precalculus course offered everyone in the class a chance to move at their own pace.

Jessica said there were students her age who completed Algebra II in the three weeks of the program.

"But they'd had algebra already," she said.

Last year Jessica was in the grade 7 honors math. There were 30 students in the class.

The time spent living at Wheaton was not all hard work. Aside from the academics and homework, there were social activities and some lighter sorts of course — like origami and sign language.

The choice to work through the summer was Jessica's. Last summer she spent her time riding her horse, Aquila, sailing and swimming.

This summer besides the three weeks at studying with the CTY program, Jessica travelled to the Space Academy in Huntsville, Alabama, for five days of classes.

Chiropractic for Health

Chiropractors

THE REASONING BEHIND ADJUSTMENTS

Although many people know that chiropractors manipulate the spine, they sometimes are not sure of the philosophy which underlines this action. Simply put, Chiropractic maintains that the nervous system plays a primary role in the maintenance of good health. If the bones of the spine should become misaligned, and in doing so constrict a nerve, disease may result. This is because every cell and tissue in the body receives its functional information through nerves which pass through openings in the spine. The doctor of chiropractic's main concern is with the removal of spinal misalignments so that nerve impulses may flow unimpeded throughout the body. A free flow of nerve energy promotes health. The chiropractor restores proper positioning to the spine by administering spinal adjustments as therapy.

DR. DEBRA M. TRANBERG, SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, 80 Front St., Scituate, 545-7388, and DR. SUSAN EMMER, CHIROPRACTIC & FAMILY WELLNESS CARE, 87 Sohier St., Cohasset, 383-1330, provides the chiropractic exam that optimizers the body's natural ability to transmit healing instructions from the brain to every organ and extremity. Weather Service gives tips for hurricane season

According to long range forecasts by the National Weather Service, a major hurricane may hit the East Coast this year. The Civil Defense/Emergency Preparedness Agency wants Cohasset residents to be prepared.

A hurricane watch means hurricane conditions could develop within 24 to 36 hours. A hurricane warning means the conditions are expected within 24 hours or less.

Since forewarned is forearmed, the agency advises residents to stay tuned to radio or television broadcasts for the latest warnings, advisories and statements. In the event of a power failure, use a portable radio or car radio to stay informed.

Continuous local weather information is broadcast over an NOAA weather station at 162.475 MHz.

In hurricanes, the greatest loss of life is usually from huge storm tides along low-lying coastal areas.

Remember, hurricanes are almost always accompanied by torrential rains. Flash flooding and tornadoes can threaten inland areas even long after the hurricane has started to wane. Be alert for stream or river flooding.

If your house is out of danger from high tides or streams and is well-built, then it is probably the safest place to weather the storm. Never remain in a mobile home. If you need to find a safe place from the wind and tides, radio broadcasts will advise you of the location of the nearest shelter.

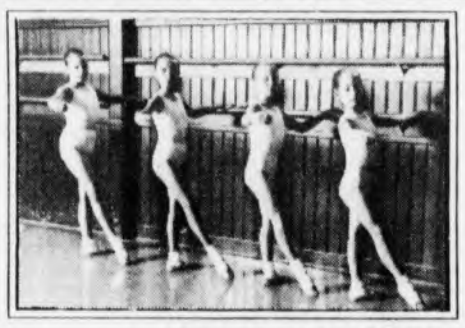
Hurricane winds can be particularly lethal, causing flying debris, falling trees and broken powerlines. Before the storm hits, board up, put on storm shutters, tape or otherwise protect windows. Secure everything that might blow away or be torn loose.

Objects such as garbage cans, garden tools, toys, signs, porch furniture and awnings become weapons of destruction in hurricane-force winds. Store them inside if at all possible.

While small windows are usually broken by flying debris, larger windows may be broken by wind pressure if unprotected. During the hurricane, stay away from windows.

Store extra food, especially items which can be eaten without cooking or with very little preparation. There may be no electricity and no refrigeration available for some time.

Sterilize jugs, bottles, cooking utensils and fill with water. Municipal water service may be interrupted and well pumps may become inoperable.



Have flashlights or other emergency lights available. Extra batteries are advisable.

Fill your car with gasoline. Filling station pumps may not operate in the event of a power failure.

If the center — or "eye" — of the storm passes directly overhead, there will be a lull in the wind lasting from a few minutes to half an hour or more. Stay in a safe place. Make emergency repairs only if essential — and remember that the wind will return suddenly from the opposite direction, often with even greater violence.

Review these safety tips with your family. Taking a few precautions now will keep everyone safe and sound throughout the hurricane season.

Maliathon problems exposed contaminate non-target areas.

13. In California, Whitefly, aphid and mite population increased or exploded in sprayed areas because malathion effectively eliminated the parasitoids and predators of these organisms. Parasites imported by California to control ice plant scale were reduced 70-90% in sprayed areas (Dr. Steven Driestad, Division of Biological Control, Univ. of California, Berkely). HERE I WOULD BE CONCERNED WITH THE TIME, MONEY AND ENERGY INVESTED IN THE IPM PROGRAMS STARTED FOR THE CRANBERRY GROWERS IN THE SOUTHEASTERN PART OF THE STATE.

14. Drs. Roger Le Brunn and Richard Casagrande, entomologists at the University of Rhode Island and consultants to the state's surveillance program, said in phone conversations that any aerial spraying, and especially the one proposed for the state of Massachusetts, is far too risky and because of the difficulty in penetration through the forest canopy probably quite ineffective in adulticide control of the target mosquito.

15. On the average, only 5% of an aerial spray reaches the target area, and less than 1% may reach the target insect.

Study pushes private ambulance

"While the MEDIVAC helicopter service is available to Cohasset, it must serve the entire state and is considered to be a supplementary emergency service; it is not intended to serve as a replacement for land-based service."

The report goes on to recommend that Cohasset join with Hingham in seeking a private Advanced Life Support program.

"To provide an in-house paramedic service for our town alone would be cost prohibitive," the report states. "The people of the town of Cohasset deserve this ALS service and a regionalized approach is the only way to provide such service on a cost effective basis."

Using figures available from town documents, the committee projected out the cost of running the ambulance for 1991 as $33,180 plus a possible pension obligation of $366,000. The pension figures were calculated by Ray Kasperowicz, who until this week was advisory committee chairman.

The committee stated that based on the number of transports and the average charge, which is $200 a run, the town should be receiving about $72,000 a year in income from the ambulance.

"However, recent revelationsby the fire chief (Daniel Brock) have shown that this is not what has been happening," the report states.

"The fire department billing and collection activities for the past five fiscal years reflect the following:

Transport

Year	Runs	Billings	Receipts
1986	396	???	$34,137
1987	343	25,810	9,510
1988	364	25,595	11,229
1989	356	26,310	20,730
1990	480	15,876	6,621

The report says the 1990 transport figure came from the fire chief. "This reflects a tremendous increase over previous years. However, the billing amount does not reflect that increase," the report states.

It goes on to ask the town accountant audit the figures.

Three private companies all estimated that it would cost $150,000 to $200,000 a year for private ambulance service in the town.

The members of the government structure committee include: F. Roy Fitzsimmons, chairman, Wilson Pile, Jack D. Bryant, Jean Cotton, Patricia Facey, Dennis Roth and James Whelan.

The report is available at the library. The selectmen and advisory committee have received copies.

❑ Brendan Mulcahy has done it again! He was recently recognized as an ALL STAR in the Stop and Shop Major Leagues. You may remember a while ago that he was a Most Valuable Player, and while he was that he continued to demonstrate those abilities and attributes which at Stop and Shop are Major League. John Wozniak, Senior Vice President said that Brendan's "daily contributions to his store team, as well as to the customers whom he serves, are certainly valued." For Brendan to be selected as an ALL STAR is an honor, and the certificate of commendation that he received should really make him proud! Brendan's name will also appear on the ALL STAR plaque so admire it when you see it! We personally feel that Brendan should get a plaque from the whole town, for all of the work he does, all of the people he helps on a daily basis, and for just being him! Congratulations go to you Brendan!

❑ The children at the Joseph Osgood playschool had a ball last week. If you happened to drive by on the 15th you saw an area full of bubbles and the children diving in and having great "fights". What a nifty idea for them to do.

❑ As most of you may know, super star Allison Ludlow has been temporarily side-lined from soccer with a knee injury. That hasn't dampened her enthusiasm one bit however, she is still part of the team. The other day she couldn't find the electric pump to pump up the soccer balls, so she did fourty of them the old fashioned way, she blew them up by hand! Now that's dedication! Allison receives her knee brace on Thursday, so you can bet she'll be on that field as soon as her therapist says it is okay to do so. We all hope that it is real soon, in the meantime, keep up your enthusiasm Alison!

❑ We commend Jean Salvador this week. Many might remember the Bicentennial celebration that Cohasset held a few years ago. Remember the wonderful parade with the floats that were made then entered into a contest? Well, Jean and her able crew won first prize for her efforts, and she has kindly donated the award to the Historical House for their visitors to look at and admire. A nice thing to do, and it will allow all to remember the bicentennial, whether you were there or not!

❑ Happy birthday greetings go to Norman Swain this week, he'll add another year on Aug. 31. Hope it is a good one, and that you have a great year ahead Norman!

❑ Speaking of birthdays, congratulations go to Carol and Arthur Masciarelli of 57 Wheelwright Farm on the birth of their daughter, who was born on Aug. 11 at South Shore Hospital.

❑ Robert Lawrence Schultz of 38 Linden Drive was awarded a bachelor of arts degree at Bowdoin College last spring. Bowdoin president A. LeRoy Greason presented the diploma. Bob is a graduate of Cohasset High School, at Bowdoin he majored in economics and minored in government and was a dean's list student. He earned four varsity letters in soccer. He was a member of the Student Admissions Volunteer Organization and the Admissions and Student Aid Committee. His fraternity was Delta Kappa Epsilon, where he served as assistant rush chair, social chair, and vice president. Bob is out in the work force now, and we wish him every success in his new venture, we know he'll be super!

Ann Pompeo caught this photo of youngsters at the recreation department's summer playground program not long ago.

❑ Speaking of Bowdoin, Holly Pompeo won't be going there for the first semester this year, she's headed for Spain and will be studying there! You can bet there weren't many dry eyes around on Sunday, everyone will truly miss her. She will do fine, Holly is a great gal and a good student, we hope that she will send letters keeping us informed of her studies.

❑ Happy September birthdays go to Shirley Laidlaw ("gram") whose birthday is Sept. 4, her daughter Jeanne McAuliffe, who celebrates hers on the 9th, and her granddaughter, Jennifer, whose birthday is on the 23rd. That's a lot of cake for one family to eat!!

❑ That's the news from here, be sure to let us know what is going on in your house!!

MBTA goes to new heights

By Joseph Mont
Mariner staff

The MBTA has unveiled four of the 75 sleek new double-decker coaches the authority plans to add to its commuter rail fleet.

These new double-deckers, the first to appear in the Northeast, will also be used along the Old Colony line, if that project can satisfy its current environmental review.

Banners bearing the slogan "Reaching New Heights to Serve You" decorated the South Station platform where MBTA officials and Governor Michael Dukakis ceremoniously welcomed the new coaches on Aug. 22.

The trains are part of a $105 million dollar contract with the Kawasaki Rail Car Company in Hyogo, Japan and will be assembled at space leased from the General Electric Company in Pittsfield.

Dukakis praised the job opportunity the new trains will provide.

"Massachusetts has the finest public transportation system assembled in the country and these double-decker cars, assembled by Massachusetts workers...not only build on that reputation, but are bringing jobs and an economic boost to the state," he said.

"We are committed to restoring the Old Colony Railroad, so that people living on the South Shore have access to a first class transportation system.

"These coaches enable even more people to leave their cars behind and ride the train to work."

According to MBTA Spokesman Peter Dimond, there has been a 100 percent increase in commuter rail usage over the last few years.

He said the need for more seating capability is most evident on the Framingham and Attleboro lines where nine coaches, with a total length of three football fields, cannot meet the ridership demand for each trip.

He said rather than lengthen station platforms and add more cars, a better solution was found in "going up" with the double-deck approach.

The new additions to the fleet will enable older coaches to be revamped and brought up to new standards, Dimond said.

According to the MBTA 51 percent of the parts for the new coaches will be made in the United States.

Dimond said the first four trains will undergo "extensive testing" for safety and maintenance effectiveness.

The trains will then be added to "revenue service" where riders can evaluate the coaches, he said.

Plans call for all 75 of the trains to be in service by the end of 1991.

The MBTA has an option with Kawasaki on 70 trains for the proposed Old Colony lines, Dimond said.

According to the MBTA, the new cars will add 13,625 new seats to the 24,500 that have been added to commuter rail service over the past three years through the purchase of 214 new coaches and 26 new locomotives.

There is virtually no size difference between the single-deck trains currently used and the new trains.

In a comparison between the basic double-decker and one of the MBTA's newer single-level commuter rail coaches, the double-decker is one inch longer, six inches narrower, and two feet, ten inches higher.

The new coaches seat 185 passengers; 63 more than the single-level coaches, and twice as many as the old Buddliners.

The new coaches will have "state of the art" heating, air conditioning and public announcement systems, as well as new "panoramic" windows, Dimond said.

The new coaches and both the old and new locomotives are all the same size, Dimond said, explaining that they meet track clearance heights on all lines and are compatible with all existing rail and equipment.

Each car is handicap accessible and will be able secure four wheelchairs.

Illegal drinking hit

On September 8, the George H. Mealy American Legion Post has the right to sell alcoholic beverages at the Christine Burke Scholarship Fund Clam Bake at Sandy Beach.

Liquor will be allowed on the beach from 10:30 a.m. to midnight, with liquor sales actually taking place between noon and 11 p.m., according to the one-day liquor license issued by the selectmen.

The license was issued on Aug. 7 and signed by four of the five selectmen. Rocco Laugelle, a member of the Legion, did not sign the permit. The rest of the board agreed to go along with a good cause for this noted town organization. The license was signed by Martha Gjesteby, Jane Goedecke, Edwin Tebbetts and Diana Kornet.

Copies of the license were sent to the police department and Sandy Beach Association.

The problem here isn't merely that the public drinking law is being blatantly ignored — the problem is no one seems to realize there is a town bylaw on the subject.

Perhaps it's the will of the majority that the public drinking bylaw be repealed.

If that's the case, some public official ought to do the leg work and present a case at town meeting.

But there is a bylaw on the subject.

It states:

"No person shall consume an alcoholic beverage, as defined in Chapter 138 of the Massachusetts General Laws, or have in his possession any such beverage with the intention of consuming it in a public place or a place to which the public has the right of access, or on private property without the owner's consent."

There's no mechanism in the bylaw for making exceptions — although as we mentioned last week, enforcement seems lax.

Police Sergeant Richard P. Barrow sent a memo to Police Chief Joseph M. Kealey after the selectmen granted the one-day liquor license explaining that his opinion was the license "is in direct violation of town bylaws."

Barrow also sent a memo earlier this summer when the selectmen granted a one-day liquor license to the 1990 Benefit Committee (that ran a two-day tennis tournament for Children's Hospital AIDS Discretionary Fund) using the Sailing Club on Government Island for an evening reception back at the start of August.

Tebbetts was the only selectmen not signing that particular permit.

At the time Barrow said anyone outside the Sailing Club building would be subject to arrest under the bylaw.

"They should be advised to stay inside of the building while consuming alcohol," his memo stated.

It seems the practice of using public property for alcohol-oriented events is growing.

We would like to know what authority the selectmen used to grant the one-day liquor license.

Now it's true Sandy Beach is privately owned. But the parking lot is public property and the public has the right to use the beach.

Sandy Beach will be open to the public on the day of the clam bake and liquor sale. (The rain date for the event is Sunday, Sept. 9)

If the weather holds, there will be quite a crowd on the beach.

What sort of example does this set?

We happen to feel the public drinking bylaw should be enforced.

We believe the only way to teach a set of values to the younger generation is to live by those values — difficult as that may be for some grownups who can't imagine a clambake without an alcohol-based drink.

Sign is a 'flagrant violation' of bylaw

To the Editor:

The sign recently installed on Don Stasko's property at the corner of Route 3A and Sohier Street is the most flagrant violation of the sign bylaw grandfather clause I have seen. The prior sign was a subtle, somewhat tasteful sign painted on a piece of plywood with indirect lighting if any. The new sign is ten inches thick, plastic, and fully illuminated.

The sign is so well lit the pilots flying over may mistake it for the runway at Logan Airport.

How can Kimball's management and Don Stasko expect local support when they choose to install a sign that is blatantly disrespectful of the sign bylaw voted into law by the citizens of Cohasset.

Townspeople have worked hard to maintain the authenticity of this town. Why should the elected officials of this town allow the management of a local establishment and a local businessman to be so abusive?

Cohasset ambulance service praised

To the Editor:

I am writing in regards to Cohasset's search for a professional ambulance service. I moved back to Cohasset with my husband and children, nine years ago because I enjoy the atmosphere of a small town. It is comforting to know the person who arrives at your home in an emergency is a member of the community and not a stranger.

In the last nine years, we have used the town's ambulance service on three separate instances. Each time we received immediate, professional and personal care. They arrived in less than five minutes of our telephone call.

If Cohasset employs a "professional" ambulance service which could be located outside of Cohasset with a traveling time of at least 15 minutes, how will they be able to provide the efficient service that the Cohasset Fire Department is presently providing us? In a life threatening situation, budget savings are not impressive to me.

As far as I am concerned, we have a professional ambulance service and we need look no further!

DEP gives the facts on encephalitis.

(Editor's note: the following is the statement of Secretaries John Devillars and Philip Johnston on Eastern Equine Encephalitis.)

The evidence made available to date by the Department of Public Health indicates an immediate need to take action to protect the public in Bristol and Plymouth counties from Eastern Equine Encephalitis. Eastern Encephalitis is rare but often fatal disease which appears in two to four year cycles every seven to 12 years.

It has a history of taking life here in Massachusetts which cannot be ignored. And others have been left debilitated for life by this tragic disease. Indicators this year are the worst in the 30 years DPH has been monitoring for EE-carrying mosquitos. For this reason, even though there has not been a human case as of today, we are acting on the Department of Public Health's recommendation that we act to protect the public and are announcing a thorough plan of aerial and ground spraying to combat this threat.

The only known way to diminish the risk of transmission of EE to the general public is through wide-spread spraying to kill adult mosquitos and more localized ground applications to their breeding sites.

Although normally, such widespread application of pesticide is something that both Environmental

Commentary

Affairs and the Department of Public Health not only do not condone but do not allow, the immediate situation calls for more drastic measures.

Therefore, today, we are initiating a program to begin mosquito control spraying in much all of Bristol and much of Plymouth counties. We have called upon the expertise of numerous state agen-

(See page 11)

Even the mosquitos will remember Diana Ross' performance at the Music Circus. There was the massive traffic jam caused by her two back-to-back performances. Then there were the star's orders to the staff not to look her in the eye or to allow anyone to be seated while she was on stage.

Cohasset Agrees CARE to Recycle Everything

By Alix White

Maybe our Earth is round to remind us that life is repeated in cycles. The last two week of August and the first week of September this year are when the mosquitos carrying Eastern Equine Encephilitis (EEE) are most likely to feed on horses and humans. Don't worry, in 3-5 years the cycle of EEE will repeat itself. It will begin with a warm, wet spring with a high water table — creating ideal conditions for mosquitoes and larvae to flourish. The female C. molanura mosquitoes then feed on birds. Then non-infected mosquitoes host on wild birds and become infected themselves — maintaining bird to mosquito to bird cycle. In the early summer, the area of infection moves off the marsh as birds or mosquitoes leave the wetlands. The female C. pertubana as well as other species of mosquitoes feed on birds infected by C. molanura mosquito and then they transmit it to horses and humans.

It is important to prepare for this event rather than panic each time it arrives. Aerial spraying of malathion is like robbing a store to pay off your credit card. We have had plenty of warning, and yet we waited until the last minute and we have reacted with drastic measures. Mosquito control takes long term planning and ACTION. These measures are simpler and more direct. I'll pass a few onto you now.

First of all — wear clothes.

Mosquitoes feed when it is damp and dark i.e. dawn and dusk, as well as overcast, damp days. For your own comfort and safety wear pants and a long sleeved shirt if you are outside, or go inside during mosquito feeding periods.

Second — restore habitats of predators.

How about building at bat house for your home? In Easton, Joe Cooney and Stephen Carlin are building bat houses for sale. Why? Because bats eat thousands of insects a night. Mosquitoes make up a big portion of their diet.

Here are some long term measures prepared by NOFA researcher and organic farmer, Martin Gursky in the Fact Sheet "Aerial Spraying of Malathion Human Health Risks of Eastern Equine Encephilitis."

Dept. of Public Health (DPH) needs to follow the advice early on of the EEE surveillance entomologist (we have some exceptionally good ones in the state), and follow the monitoring closely. Any spraying should be done from the ground possibly using Bacillus thuringensis, israelensis (Bt. i). Along with the above, a comprehensive education program should also be provided.

a. As suggested in Paul Debach in his book, Biological Control of Natural Enemies, one can displace the vector of disease mosquito with a non-vector one.

b. try releasing sterile males at critical breeding periods.

c. try releasing a non-toxic surface film to he water to disrupt mosquito larval breathing.

d. Use phermone traps.

e. Alter existing habitats.

f. Study the migratory bird population to understand the full cycle of the EEE virus. With this information, it might be possible to disrupt the cycle.

These are not high flying ideas, but simple down to Earth ones. That's what we're looking for — a way of living with all the diverse species on this Earth, and not perpetually against them.

Troubleshooting at the RTF:

Clothes: Put these in the Salvation Army bin, conveniently located between the glass and Boutique areas.

Glass: Another load of glass was rejected for payment this past week because we had contaminated glass. That translates in our pocket book to a $600-$800 loss. PLEASE take the metal off your class.

Hazardous Household Waste Day, Sept. 15 at the High School

The preliminary list is as follows: ALL pesticides, insecticides, and fungicides will be accepted.

Encephalitis ...

cies to develop a spraying plan that — while addressing the public health problem — also seeks to minimize impacts on surface water, drinking water supplies and their recharge areas and agricultural fields. Special efforts will also be made to insure that the public is well informed as to where and when spraying will occur so that residents of these two counties can avoid unnecessary exposure.

The EE situation is a textbook example of the need to balance the response to an immediate public health crisis with long term environmental — as well as public health — concerns. The present danger from EE demands a prompt and thorough response, but concerns about long term effects of pesticide residuals in crops, ground and surface water supplies must be weighed as well. That is why we are making every effort to localize aerial spraying to the greatest possible extent, and will not spray over open bodies of water or within 400 feet of their shorelines. We will also back up the spray effort with ground applications of a biological substance — BTI (bacillus thureujis) — to kill mosquito larvae before they hatch. Thorough spraying to kill adult mosquitos will immediately lower the present threat to public health: ground applications of larvacide will reduce the likelihood of later hatches of virus-carrying mosquitos this season and next.

This action is not meant in any way to unnecessarily alarm the public. We want to stress that our purpose in taking this action is preventive, and that the public, too, should take steps to avoid the risks of EE. Simple precautions — wearing a long sleeved shirt while gardening or working near wetland areas, using personal bug repellents and making sure screens are in good repair and can keep mosquitos from coming in household windows — are all steps we recommend people take. When outdoors, covering cribs and playpens with mosquito netting is especially important.

We are not contemplating closing campsites or parks at this time, since campers are best prepared to cope with mosquitos and the Department of Environmental Management has circulated mosquito precaution information throughout the state park system and made this information to private campgrounds as well.

A concert for Konohasset

The "Konohassett," a newly restored hand tub pumper built in 1856 for the Brooklyn Navy Yard; some 20 vintage autos from the South Shore Antique Auto Club; and a pumper fire engine that served the Town of Cohasset for nearly 30 years will assemble on Highland Avenue at Cohasset Common on Sunday, September 2, in time for the final concert of the season on the Cohasset Carillon.

The concert, on the recently refurbished 57-bell instrument in the tower of Saint Stephen's Church in Cohasset, will begin at 6 p.m. Carillonneur Sally Slade Warner will be the recitalist.

As a tribute to the antique vehicles and their drivers, Warner will conclude the concert with a rousing version of "In My Merry Oldsmobile."

Other selections to be played on the carillon, the largest in New England, will include music by Tchaikovsky and Puccini, as well as compositions written especially for the instrument. Bells in the Cohasset Carillon range in size from a 29-pound treble bell to the 11,200-pound Bourdon bell.

The antique autos will leave from Rockland Plaza for the drive to Cohasset, arriving at the Cohasset Common between 5 and 5:30 p.m., according to Richard Baldasare of South Weymouth, coordinator of the tour for the South Shore Antique Auto Club. The cars will be parked along Highland Avenue, where concert goers are invited to view them.

The 1856 hand pumper, which is owned by the Cohasset Historical Society, has been on public display only one other time since its restoration was completed three months ago, according to Charles Fink, society president.

The 1953 pumping engine, which served the Town of Cohasset until 1982, is owned and has been restored by Glen Pratt of Cohasset. He will be on hand to explain its features to visitors.

Concert goers are encouraged to bring folding chairs, blankets and picnic dinners. Best listening places include the courtyard behind the church and on the Highland Avenue side of the Common (away from traffic noise). Parking is available in the town hall parking lot, 41 Highland Avenue, or in the town parking lot at Depot Court and Ripley Road.

Blood drive planned

A blood drive will be held from 2 to 7 p.m. Tuesday, Sept. 25, at the parish house of First Parish Unitarian Church, 23 North Main St.

New Ethereal Design hours

Ethereal Design in Cohasset Village is changing its hours on a temporary basis, according to Robin Mather-Dharms, the shop's owner and jewelry designer.

Mather-Dharms said she needs to spend more time creating new work for the shop and so she is reducing the shopping times until the end of September.

For now the shop will be open from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

Summer readers were hot

There were 110 participants in the summer reading program at the Paul Pratt Public Library, according to Suzanne Terry, librarian.

The youngsters involved ranged from grade 1 students through grade 7.

New hours at art center

The South Shore Art Center, 119 Ripley Road, Cohasset, announces its new hours.

The hours of the South Shore Art Center Galleries will be extended on Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. to better serve the region. Beginning Sept. 1, the new SSAC gallery and office hours will be Tuesday-Saturday 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. The Art Center will be closed Sundays and Mondays.

Tour of 'The Glades' set

The Cohasset Historical Society will hold a major summer event on Sunday, Sept. 23. Featured will be a walking tour of "The Glades," the famous 19th century seaside estate at Strawberrt Point, Minot. This fabulous summer estate, owned by a group of families, once was a summer hotel, and earlier in the 1800's was the location of the "Pilot House," headquarters of the Boston Harbor shipping Pilots.

"The Glades" is reknowned for its natural beauty and its oceanside setting. This summer's Society tour represents a return by the Society to the scene of one of its most popular events, the Glades tour of just a few years ago. More information about the Cohasset Historical Society's tour of "The Glades" will be forthcoming.

Opening of Osgood offers treats

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

When Osgood School opens its doors for the first day of school, there are a few new treats in store.

The giant open classroom has been divided into three bright and airy classrooms for the third grade. There are cheerful bulletin boards to greet the children. And Linda Whitney will be everywhere getting to know her new school and its children.

Whitney was hired when long-time principal Jack Creamer decided to retire. Although she officially took the helm on Aug. 6, all summer long she has been coming to the school.

Those summer months were rough, she said. Nothing looks lonelier and emptier than a school with no signs of the children who fill it with life, laughter and creativity.

In addition to her role at Osgood, Whitney will oversee the curriculum for both Osgood and Deer Hill Schools.

Whitney thinks the two schools are ready to implement the things the teachers want to do and have been talking about for a while.

The proof is in the fact that many teachers at the two schools spent time during their summer vacations in courses, workshops and seminars.

"Cohasset is very strong in the traditional basic skills," Whitney said. She hopes to help them incorporate some of the developmental approaches of whole language, math manipulatives and thematic instruction.

Whole language translates into providing children with an environment that encourages reading, writing and oral communication.

"We use children's natural learning styles and their thirst to learn," Whitney said. "Children think language is fun. They love the rhyme, rhythm and pattern of language."

The whole language process builds on that by filling the child's school environment with books, tapes, posters and magazines to stimulate the children to be readers and writers.

Reading and writing are two ends of the same communication process, Whitney said.

In the whole language approach, children begin by drawing pictures, then drawing pictures in a sequence that "tells" a story. The children are encouraged to label their pictures.

"It might only be a 'B' for 'Me on my Bike,' " Whitney said. "That is the beginning of writing. And writing is the beginning of reading."

Because the whole language approach relies on the children hearing a lot of stories and communicating their own stories, parent and community volunteers are an essential component.

"I am an advocate of parent volunteers," Whitney said. She will encourage volunteers to the fullest extent a teacher feels comfortable with them.

Math manipulatives are part of the move to help students understand math from the inside out.

Students will be encourage to look for patterns in nature, because patterns are what mathematics is all about. Children will be encouraged to use concrete learning materials so they develop a concrete understanding of what a number is, what it means to add, subtract, multiply and divide.

"We want children to develop math sense so they really understand what they are doing," Whitney said.

One learning strategy Whitney likes is having children keep a math journal.

"We might have a third grader write how he would explain multiplication to a second grader in the math journal," she said. By reading his explanation, the teacher can see if the child understands what he is doing.

Since all math builds on the skills learned at a lower level, a child with math sense has a definite advantage.

Building connections between disciplines is also high on Whitney's agenda.

"We need to marry science and social studies, for instance," she said.

Traditionally science and social studies are offered at the end of the day and rated as less important than reading and math. By presenting the curriculum in a thematic way, science and social studies become part of the math and reading curriculum.

In this approach, students might study 'The Desert World.' They would read stories about the desert, do math problems with a desert theme, learn about temperature and water conservation.

"We need to be helping children to see the connections between all the disciplines," Whitney explained.

As the educational leader of Osgood and the curriculum leader for both elementary schools, Whitney sees her mission as working with everybody and being a facilitator and resource person.

"I want to empower all the constituents of the educational system," she said.

Taylor O'Brien enjoyed last year's nursery school program.

Red Cross to hold 'Latchkey' kid course

Recent reports indicate that over one third of all elementary age children take care of themselves after school. While there is little that can be done to change the underlying causes of this situation, the time spent alone by the so-called "latchkey" children can be safe and constructive.

The American Red Cross, in response to the growing concerns of parents and school systems, offers the "Alone at Home" program. This is a one-hour course designed to teach children, from kindergarten to sixth grade, simple rules and procedures for responsible self-care. The course includes a sixteen minute movie, "Alone at Home," thematic activity books, and emergency phone number stickers. An instructor guide has also been included to facilitate student discussion and understanding of the various topics. This program is offered by the Red Cross to school departments, teachers, and health educators for classroom use.

Over 5,000 school children have participated in this program. If you would like more information about this course, please call Roz Becovsky at 331-6999.

Linda Whitney is ready to begin school

That includes the children.

Children need to understand that ideas matter, she said. One way of doing that is by keeping the displays at eye level and by displaying their work prominently.

The school needs to be a nurturing kind of place, according to Whitney. She wants it to feed the head and the heart, creating secure individuals who will be lifelong learners.

"The community and parents need to feel welcome, too," Whitney said. "We need to use our community by having them come in and speak to the children or write letters. We can use them as a resource for our children."

Whitney likes her new office, but doesn't think she'll spend much time in it.

She plans to spend most of her time getting to know the children, the teachers and the curriculum in the only place you can really get to know them: in the classroom.

She also wants to get to know the families of her students and the community. Living in Mansfield makes that difficult, so she and her husband,Tom, are househunting on the South Shore.

It will be an easy change for Tom who works in Boston as a controller/manager for a company that steam heats and cools commercial buildings

When Whitney isn't roaming the halls of her new bailiwick, she devotes her time to her family. She and Tom have two young daughters, Katie and Sarah. They spend their time playing tee ball, biking and taking nature walks with the girls.

Whitney is a warm weather sort — she loves swimming, sailing and tennis. She and Tom are golf partners.

They love to travel, but with young children they aren't as free to pick up and go as they were before.

True to her vocation, Whitney is an avid reader. She loves to take a break from professional journals and other weighty matters by indulging herself in mysteries and spy novels.

Right now she can't wait for that first school bus to arrive. She'll probably be the first one out the door to greet them as they arrive.

Cable television attracted Deer Hill students attention during the last school year. The annual news show created such interest that a quiz show followed.

crossing the street to board the bus.

• As a result of increased enrollment and the limited number of buses we have experienced difficulty in scheduling transportation for Osgood children. In all cases we have attempted to do what is in the best interest of the children. However, in many cases, children, including Kindergarten children, will be required to meet at a designated bus stop and parental support is necessary. We appreciate your cooperation in this matter.

• This year we have broadened the number of children who will be considered "walkers" to cover the Highland Avenue, Highland Court and North Main Street (11, 41, 55 and 130) areas along with Fairoaks, Sohier St., and Ripley Road.

• As we have a small number of buses that are filled to capacity, we are not able to fill parent requests for bus changes.

Massasoit honors listed

Three Cohasset residents were listed on the dean's list for the spring semester at Massasoit Community College.

They are: Meredith A. Deveney, John J. Dockray and Glenn E. Dukes.

Back to school

Cable television attracted Deer Hill students attention during the last school year. The annual news show created such interest that a quiz show followed.

Bus schedules...

crossing the street to board the bus.

• As a result of increased enrollment and the limited number of buses we have experienced difficulty in scheduling transportation for Osgood children. In all cases we have attempted to do what is in the best interest of the children. However, in many cases, children, including Kindergarten children, will be required to meet at a designated bus stop and parental support is necessary. We appreciate your cooperation in this matter.

• This year we have broadened the number of children who will be considered "walkers" to cover the Highland Avenue, Highland Court and North Main Street (11, 41, 55 and 130) areas along with Fairoaks, Sohier St., and Ripley Road.

• As we have a small number of buses that are filled to capacity, we are not able to fill parent requests for bus changes.

MIAA has equitable play as goal

By David McKee
Mariner staff

In a move designed to promote more balanced and equitable play, the Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association has voted this month to add a Division IA to the state high school hockey tournament.

This Division IA tournament will be comprised of the eight best teams in the state, according to a ranking system yet to be devised by the MIAA, and will be double elimination.

And while the IA tournament is open to teams from all three divisions in state high school hockey, the realignment is seen as a way to end the state tournament dominance of parochial schools which have won the division I state title for the past 12 years and have won 83 of 88 games played against public high schools in all divisions.

"What to do about the parochial school dominance has been an issue for 15 years," said MIAA assistant director Bill Gaine. "Hopefully this will address some of that. We certainly wouldn't want to establish a system that is not fair. And I believe we have set up four very strong tournaments."

The Division I, II, and III tournaments will remain in place with no changes and will continue to be single elimination, according to Gaine.

As for the ranking system to be used for the Division IA tournament, Gaine said factors like record and strength of schedule will be taken into account. He said that the ratings system will be decided early in the fall by the MIAA.

"We will select the eight best teams regardless of geography or division and have them play each other," Gaine said. "I think this will good for high school hockey in Massachusetts."

Area high school coaches and athletic directors voiced support for the move, but some felt it did not go far enough.

Cohasset High School coach Dennis Walsh was pleased that the MIAA acted to correct the imbalance, but feels politics played a role in the final decision.

"The parochial schools have the ability to recruit from all areas of the state and I don't think that is fair for public schools," he said. "We have to play with the kids we have in town. But I still think there is too much politics involved. They are protecting the parochial schools with the compromise. They should have their own set-up."

However, he thinks the move will be good for Cohasset.

"Right now it doesn't affect us until we make the state tourney," he said. "But it would help us have a better draw."

Scituate High School coach Ross Mottau, who said he was not entirely familiar with the MIAA moves, nevertheless agreed that something needed to be done.

"We play in the Old Colony League and we have a tough schedule in there and don't play any parochial schools during the regular season," he said. "But if we should make it to the tournament, it would only be fair to play schools that are similar to us. I feel that something needs to be done. The system, as it is, is not fair."

Scituate has not qualified for the state tournament in more than six years.

"Many coaches and AD's seemed afraid to make the recommendations needed, but hopefully we can put in a system that is fair to everyone," Mottau said.

Hingham High School coach Garrett Reagan, who led his team to a 19-1 regular season finish, but was booted out of the state tourney by St. John's, agreed with the intent of the realignment.

"The public schools have always felt it has been unfair competition to go against the parochial schools," he said. "And this is a compromise. No one is really thrilled about it, but I hope they can do it right."

If Division IA was in effect last season, Hingham could have been one of the final eight, according to Reagan.

"When they were going over the proposals, it was figured that we might have been one of the schools," he said. "We would have given them tough games, but it would not have been fair to go against teams that can draw from New Bedford, Natick or even New Hampshire, while we can only draw from Hingham. I think a separate tournament would have been best because I would want to play against teams using the same deck of cards."

Silver Lake's athletic director Ralph Frazier said that only good can come from the realignment.

"I applaud the MIAA's action. This problem has been around for a while and I'm glad they are finally doing something about it," he said. "And they are setting it up is so that no schools are segregated. I think that is important."

Hanover High School coach Jim Sylvia, who led his team to the semi-finals of the Division II tournament where they lost in overtime to Arlington Catholic, agreed that the parochial schools should have their own separate tournament.

"We are always fighting the same battle," he said. "This set-up will put the eight best teams on display and take attention away from the rest of the teams. There should be a public school tournament and a parochial school tournament. We have played parochial school and have beaten them, but it is no secret that parochial schools are all-star teams. They have such a wide area to draw talent from. I'm limited to taking my team from Hanover students. If I could take kids from Hingham or Abington or all around here, then I could have the success the parochial schools have had."

Sylvia said the move was a compromise and does not settle all the problems of the current tournament structure.

"Teams should be facing teams with the same advantages," he said. "This realignment is trying to be a compromise but it doesn't solve some of the bigger questions."

Marshfield High Hockey coach Jack Crowley said the move could help hockey programs in the long run.

"I think there will be more interest now," he said. "It will give more teams a fairer chance. The statistics on the head to head competition speak for themselves. The public schools lose so many talented players to parochial schools, hopefully with the recognition from winning some tournament games, some of the kids will want to stay."

Hingham's Bob Rioux, who heads the Public High School Sports Action Committee, has been fighting for years with the MIAA to have the tournament realigned.

"What the MIAA was doing to public schools was nonsense," he said. "The MIAA has recognized the problem for 12 years and really did nothing. I have no problem with the parochial schools, they are only playing by the rules set up, but it is safe to say they are winning not because of good coaching, as many would have you believe. They can draw from so much talent, that I could put you in charge and they would win."

However, Rioux says the realignment is a step in the right direction.

"We applaud the MIAA for recognizing the problem and attempting to correct it," he said. "They are taking a positive step, it might not be the only step needed, but we support what they are doing."

Art center offers something for all

This fall at the South Shore Art Center, 119 Ripley Road, there is an art avenue for everyone of all ages and level of ability to explore at a variety of times throughout the day.

Young artists as well as adults may choose a short course in the form of a workshop which lasts anywhere from one day to four days or an 8 week course. For those of us who prefer to watch rather than actively engage in the creation of art, there will be several lectures. The first upcoming lecture is entitled: The art and craft of Oriental rugs: Learning to Recognize Quality, Craftmanship, Origin and Design. On Thursday, Sept. 13, from 7:30 to 9 p.m., George Grillo of Hingham will present an overview of the field of oriental rugs with the neophyte in mind. Grillo, whose credentials are lengthy, is a Meyers Fellow of the Textile Museum, Washington, DC, a member of Appraisers Association of America and the Association of Specialists in Cleaning and Restoration. Grillo will focus on: oriental rug construction, aesthetic considerations, current centers of production, care and maintenance, and buying for enjoyment or investment. Slides, fragments, maps and actual rug examples will be used to supplement the presentation.

The next lecture will be a two part lecture with Peggy Connors entitled: Gardening by The Sea. This two part presentation will begin on Thursday, Sept. 20 from 7:30 to 8:45 p.m. at the art center with a colorful and informative slide lecture featuring local properties. Come and learn a common-sense approach to successful gardening in the seaside environment. Discussion will cover the fundamentals of soil preparation, amendments, practical and aesthetic considerations in plant selection and elements of design. On Saturday, Sept. 22, participants will visit Peggy Connor's Duxbury Garden to see first-hand the plants discussed on Thursday night. Peggy Connors holds a B.A. from Simmons College, has completed the Certificate Program in Landscape and Environmental Design from Radcliffe College and has studied additionally at the Harvard Graduate School of Design and the Chateau de la Napoule, France. The proceeds from this particular event will be donated to the beautification of the Shirley F. Neer Garden at the Art Center.

Pre-registration is required for all programs at the Art Center. To register or for more information, please call Tuesday-Saturday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. at 383-9548.

Piano lessons offered

Priscilla D. Daniels, teacher of pianoforte, once again is arranging her fall schedule at her Beach Street home in Cohasset.

Her individual instruction has attracted students who have had careers in music, while others play just for pleasure.

Daniels is a graduate of the New England Conservatory of Music, magna cum laude. She is a member and past-president of Alpha Chi Omega, national sorority, and Pi Kappa Lambda, honorary professional society.

As part of the weekly lesson she incorporates music theory, harmony, rhythm study and composition, and through the medium of the pianoforte she strives to communicate a love and appreciation of the fine arts.

Keep fit at the CCC

The fall schedule for Keep Fit classes at the Cohasset Community Center is now Tuesday and Thursday at 7 p.m. and Saturday from 8:30 to 10 a.m.

Sign-ups are now being taken for September and the first class will be held on September 4. Call Judy at 383-0088 for more information or to preregister.

Morning classes on Monday, Wednesday and Friday will resume on September 5 at 9 a.m.

First Parish summer hours

Summer services at the First Parish Unitarian Universalist Church in Cohasset begin at 9 a.m.

Sunday morning services will return to the regular time of 10:30 a.m. beginning Sept. 9.

Nativity mass planned

The Nativity of the Virgin Mary Greek Orthodox Church will be celebrating her feast day with two significant services. The Vesper services will be held on September 7, at 7:30 p.m. with guest clergy of the surrounding area. Following this service, the Ladies Philoptochos Society will host all in the parish house.

On the following day, September 8, Saturday, there will be a Matins service at 8:30 a.m. followed immediately by the devine liturgy at 9 a.m.

The Nativity of the Virgin Mary, The Mother of God, is one of the major feast days of the Orthodox Christian world. It was through her that God chose to have his son, Jesus Christ, born who would be the deliverer of humankind. Thus, in the spectrum of the calendar, it is one of the days that is considered a major feast, along with the Annunciation and her Dormition.

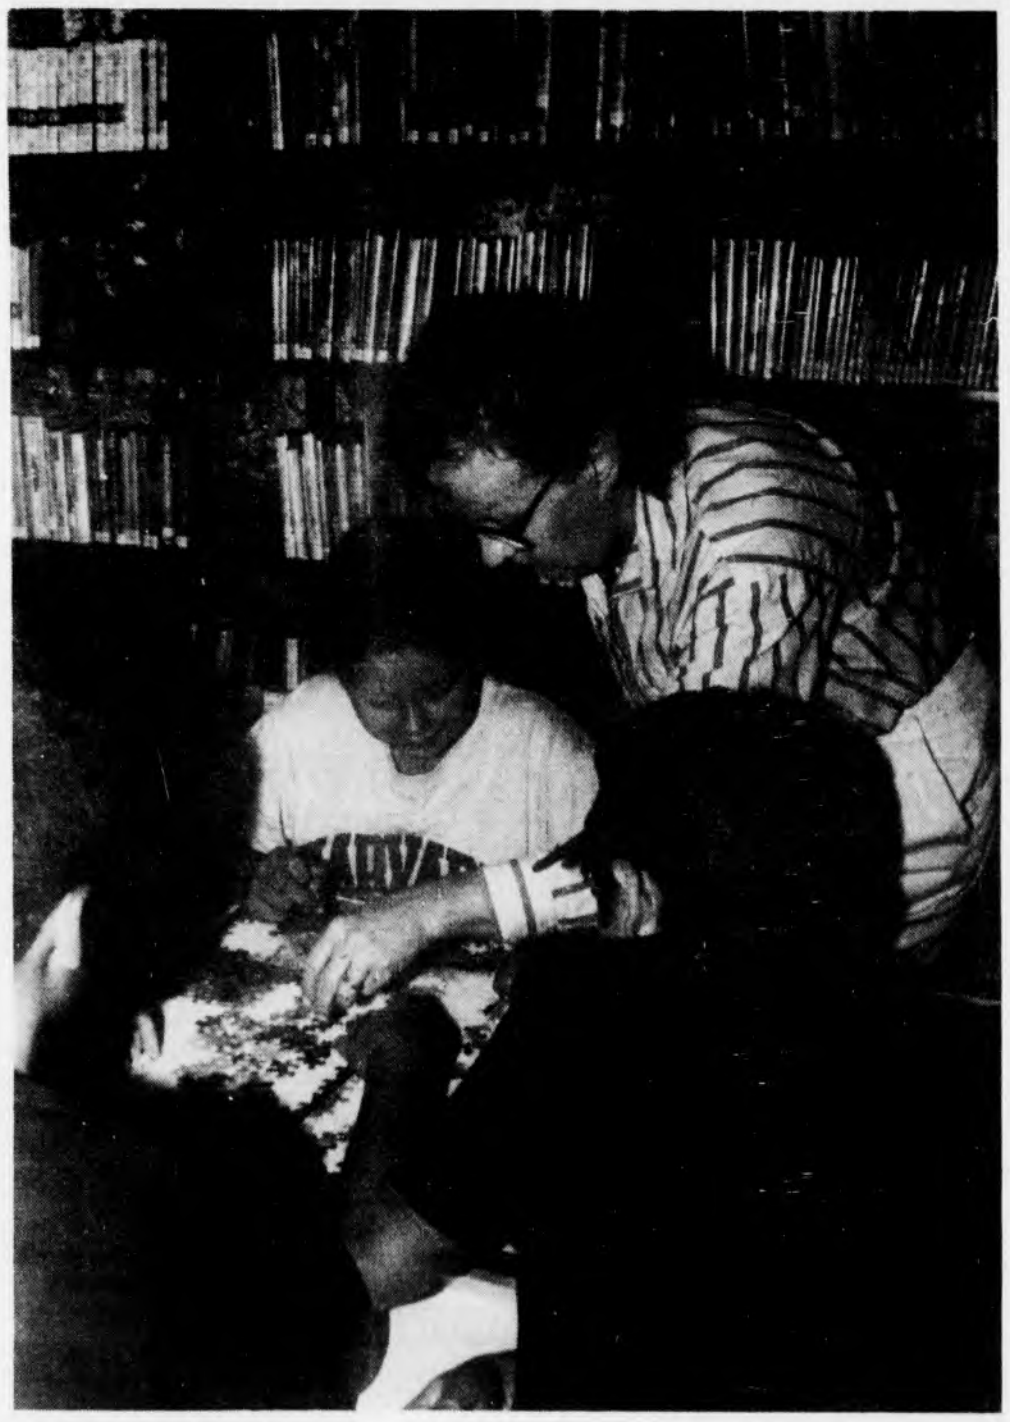
Puzzling situation



On Monday and Tuesday evenings throughout the summer, an enthusiastic group of Deer Hill students have been meeting at the Paul Pratt Library to discuss books they have read, exchange recommendations, and work on solving some mysteries. Marjorie Murphy, Deer Hill librarian, bought a mystery package which came with a story and a mystery jig-saw puzzle. All of the kids read the story, and then worked on the puzzle together over a few weeks time, to find more clues and solve the mystery. Everyone enjoyed it ,so much that they began a second puzzle last week. Prizes were awarded to those who currently solved the mystery.

Members of the reading club were: Bobby Meehan, Ryan McWilliams, Matt O'Connor, Holly Brennock, Justin Buckley, Paul Sheerin, Adam Sheerin, Burke Davis, Sean Norris, Matt Rossi, Robby Buckley, Joey Magner, Jessica Eaton-Bruce, Jennifer Burns, Jeremy Williams and Ben Ketcham.

Club advisors are Mrs. Murphy and Sue Terry, Children's Librarian at Paul Pratt Library.

Jeremy Williams was ecstatic to find a matching piece to the mystery puzzle.

Marjorie Murphy, the librarian at Deer Hill Middle School lends Bobby Meehan a helping hand.

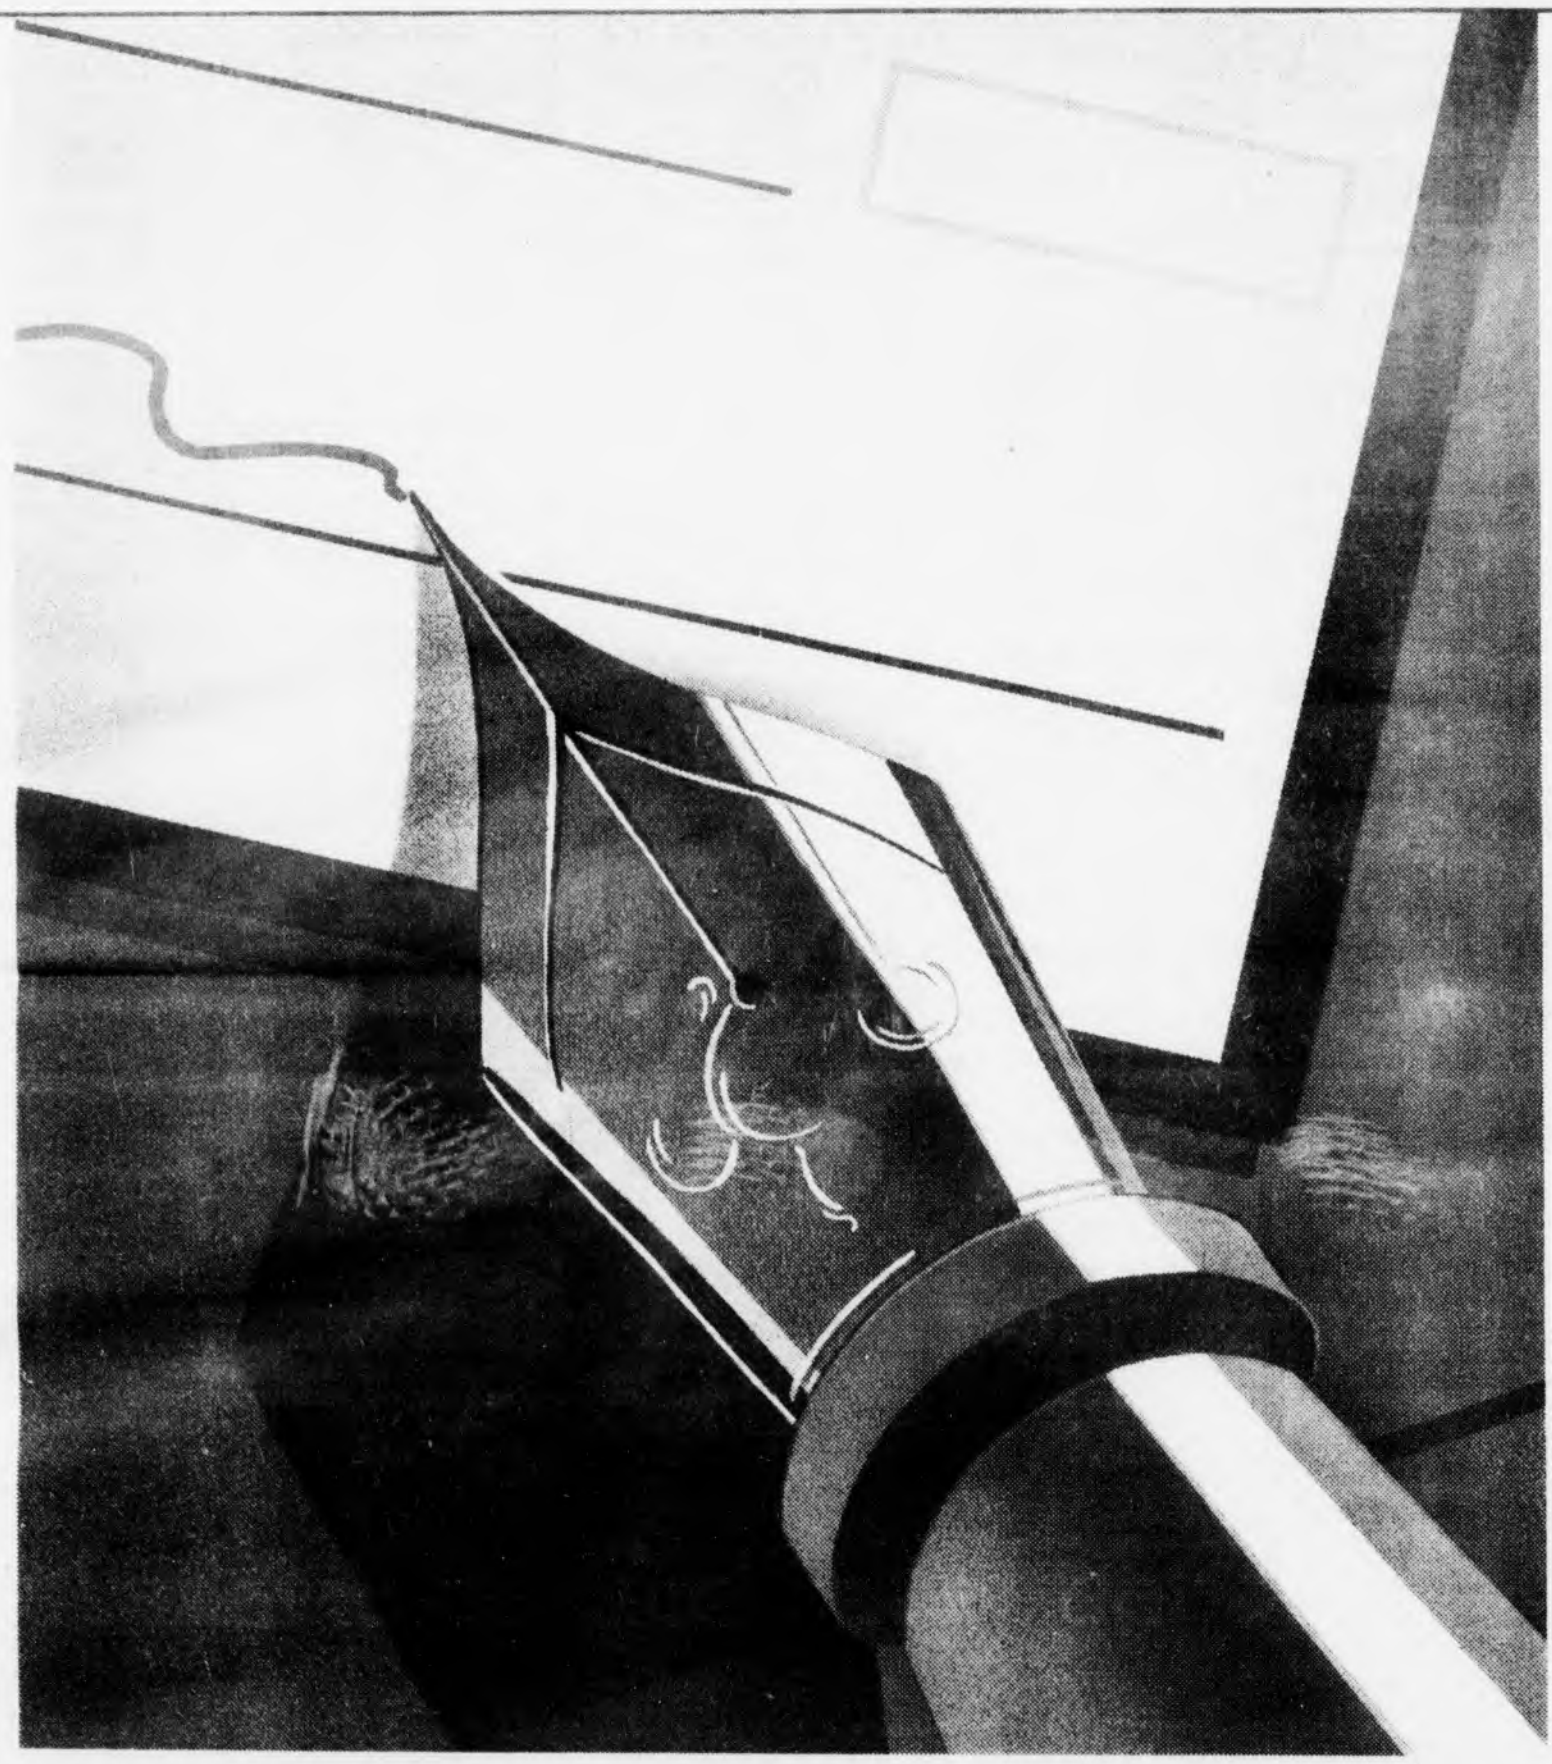
Sailing Club awards set

The Cohasset Sailing Club has announced plans for its annual Labor Day Awards program to be held at the Sailing Club on Government Island, Monday, Sept. 3.

The day's events are open to everyone and, according to Commodore Ray Kasperowicz, begin with the Labor Day Race Series at 10 a.m. The races are held in Cohasset Harbor and are within easy viewing range for interested spectators. The races are the final club activity for the sailing classes. Awards are given to the top finishers in each class.



If you're looking for a great spot for lunch along the harbor, clam chowder, hot dogs and soda will be available for purchase from 11 a.m to 1 p.m.

The official awards program gets underway at 1 p.m. with the presentation of Certificates of Instruction for all who have mastered their class sailing instruction.

In addition, numerous awards and trophies will be presented to skippers who have demonstrated outstanding sailing achievement. Trophies will also be given to the winners of the various summer racing series. Commodore Kasperowicz also noted there will be a very special surprise award this year.

The Cohasset Sailing Club is completing its 30th year of sailing instruction for Cohasset residents.

Panel, fire chief scrap over ambulance

The future of Cohasset's ambulance service and the size of the fire department was the big item on the selectmen's agenda Tuesday night. The meeting generated plenty of heat, but little light.

The only outcome was an agreement by the selectmen that they needed more information and more time to think about the issues and questions raised.

The Committee to Survey Structure and Functions of Town Government presented and defended their recommendation to terminate the fire department-operated ambulance service and contract with a private company. The committee argued the town would gain better service and save substantial money.

Fire Chief Daniel Brock called the report a "smoke screen." He suggested the committee had a hidden agenda.

"The real purpose is to cut firefighters," Brock said.

Cohasset's ambulance makes approximately one medical transport each day.

The committee mustered facts and figures from a variety of towns in the commonwealth including Georgetown, Blackstone, Hamilton, and Ayer to prove Cohasset was paying too much for fire services.

The committee said private ambulance companies promised Cohasset would have a dedicated ambulance based in Cohasset and manned around the clock by EMTs. If the ambulance was called out of town on a run, the companies said another ambulance would be stationed in Cohasset or on route to town.

By eliminating the ambulance, Cohasset could cut eight EMT-firefighter positions. Any shortage in personnel could be made up by using more call or volunteer firefighters, the committee suggested.

Cohasset's EMT-firefighters and ambulance supporters disputed the committee's facts, figures and conclusions. Several people said the figures

Peripatetic puppies provoke predicament

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

Amos and Jasmin are in hot water again.

Five days after selectmen warned Andrew Spalt and Margaret Lincoln of 805A Chief Justice Cushing Highway to keep the rambunctious puppies restrained at all times or the dogs would have to go, Animal Control Officer William Quigley picked the pups up and impounded them.

Selectmen scheduled a new hearing for Sept. 10, but plan to ask town counsel if the dogs can be exiled without further hearing.

Quigley testified at the Aug. 20 hearing that the dogs had been running across Route 3A and spending their days in Marsha Ritcey's Brewster Road yard. Although Ritcey has no objections to dogs, these two had been terrorizing her two-year-old grandson by jumping on him, knocking him down and taking food out of his hands.

"My grandson has had nine kidney operations and he is only two. He can't be hurt this way," Ritcey told selectmen during the hearing.

Ritcey said she had called the owners on more than 20 occasions before she had given up and called the dog officer.

Spalt was not present at the hearing, but he was represented by co-owner Lincoln and Mark Froio, also of 805A Chief Justice Cushing Highway. Lincoln gave the selectmen a long list of excuses and promised to fence the yard and take more precautions to keep the dogs restrained.

Quigley told selectmen he didn't think the owners could be relied on to use any restraining device he would recommend.

"It's one thing to have them and another to use them," Quigley said at the time. "I've impounded them and the next day they are loose."

"You can't have any accidents. You can't make mistakes," Selectman Jane Goedecke warned Lincoln.

When Quigley impounded the dogs on Aug. 25, he found that Spalt and Lincoln had not installed the chain link fence as promised. He asked the selectmen to schedule another hearing.

Since then, the dogs have been impounded on at least one other occasion and no fence has been installed, according to Executive Secretary Greg Doyon.

'You can't have any accidents. You can't make mistakes.'

COHASSET'S WEEK

Drug pamphlet approved

The board of selectmen signed on to co-sponsor the drug and alcohol committee's Safe Home project. The project asks parents of students in grades six through 12 to stay home when their children have parties and to ensure that alcoholic beverages and drugs are not consumed by minors in their homes.

The selectmen also gave the group permission to use their bulk mail permit if they meet postal regulations to send out pamphlets explaining the program and asking parents to take the pledge.

Water company seeks new fee and rate increase

Not only does the Massachusetts-American Water Company of Hingham want to raise water fees, they want to stop billing towns for hydrant use and tack the cost on their customers'bills. If the state department of public utilities approves the changes, some Cohasset residents will be affected.

Former water superintendent Ben Curley said Cohasset residents with water service from the Hingham company will be charged twice for fire hydrants. They pay for the Cohasset water department with their tax dollars for the fire department budget and they will be paying for the water company's hydrants in their water bills.

Selectmen agreed it was unfair and directed Executive Secretary Greg Doyon to send a letter to

Special town meeting set

Selectmen set Oct. 22 as the date for a special town meeting. The warrant was officially opened Sept. 4 and will close Sept. 13 at 7 p.m.

Although final figures aren't available yet, it appears the town needs to raise $160,000 in new growth taxes to balance the budget. The town cannot set the tax rate unless the budget is balanced.

"No major budget cuts are anticipated as the shortfall can be met by appropriating free cash and adjusting the County Retirement budget to reflect the actual assessment," Executive Secretary Greg Doyon informed the selectmen.

According to Doyon, the retirement budget can be cut by $30,000. He believes there may be other possible adjustments as well.

Fuel tanks removed

The two underground fuel tanks behind the police-fire station are now a thing of the past, according to Executive Secretary Greg Doyon.

The excavation and removal of the tanks came in at $3,194 — about $600 less than the estimate. Doyon said the town may also qualify for some state reimbursement of highway department labor because the removal was mandated by the state.

Parking problems aired

Selectmen reviewed their options for dealing with parking problems on opposite sides of the village.

Selectman Jane Goedecke said they would need to tackle the problem of illegal parking at the Swim Center on North Main Street when the swim season reopens next spring.

"This is not a question of unsightly cars," she said. "This is a serious safety hazard."

According to Goedecke, cars parked illegally block access to the center by ambulances and fire trucks and create a visibility hazard. She recommended that police ticket illegally parked cars religiously.

Selectmen Chairman Rocco Laugelle suggested creation of a circular driveway on the Swim Center property may reduce many of the hazards Goedecke was concerned about.

Selectman Diana Kornet said problems exist on the other side of town with Chart House Restaurant employees parking in the small street between Summer and Border Streets.

According to Kornet, employees leaving the area in the wee hours of the morning are waking residents along the street. During the six to eight hours their cars are clogging the street, they are making life difficult for the homeowners.

"Sometimes it's impossible for them to have guests," Kornet said. "They can't even get in and out of their own driveway."

She also worried about fire truck and ambulance access to homes on the street.

Selectman Ned Tebbetts suggested residents try to work out their problems with the Chart House management before the town steps in to impose a solution to the problem.

Post-spraying debriefing

Selectmen vented their concerns and frustrations about the Malathion spraying.

Although the state had said the spraying would be complete in Cohasset at 8 a.m., Selectman Martha Gjesteby found the planes spraying over her property at 8:45 a.m. — after she had already uncovered her garden.

"I just wish they had a little leeway in their hours," she said.

Selectman Jane Goedecke said people who called the hot line number at 8:45 a.m. were told all spraying was completed.

"Now that's wrong," she complained.

Gjesteby said constituents were concerned about their inability to get information.

"They're remembering Agent Orange and DDT," she said.

The pesticide board is planning a post-spraying public hearing to deal with concerns, fears and complaints.

In the year of the negative ad, meet a positive voice: Robert Ambler.

It's often been said that in politics when you have nothing positive to say about yourself, attack your opponent.

This year, only one candidate for State Senate has talked positively about himself, about what he's done, and about what he'll do if elected.

That candidate is Bob Ambler.

During this campaign, Bob Ambler has garnered the support of thousands of people in the district by talking both about his past achievements as well as his future goals.

HIS RECORD SPEAKS FOR ITSELF:

- ☑ The author of tax amnesty which produced $80 million for the state
- ☑ Author of hundreds of pro-consumer pieces of legislation
- ☑ Leading opponent of the creation of the MWRA without fiscal oversight
- ☑ Consistent opponent of additional taxes
- ☑ Architect of the Massachusetts Lottery which has returned hundreds of millions in local aid to cities and towns

This year send the message that negative campaigning doesn't work.

Vote for a candidate with a record he's proud of.

Vote Robert Ambler, Democrat, our next State Senator.

Liquor license issues

Selectmen Ned Tebbetts put fellow selectmen and town residents on notice that in the future he would vote against any requests for liquor license permits for functions on Sandy Beach.

Tebbetts made it clear he was not seeking to undo previously-granted permits, but would adhere to the letter of the town bylaws in the future.

Tebbetts' position triggered a defense of the selectmen's past actions by Selectman Diana Kornet. Kornet took issue with the Aug. 30 Mariner editorial calling the functions at Sandy Beach and the sailing club "alcohol-oriented events."

"I was so incensed by that editorial," she said. "In no case was it an alcohol-oriented event. It was a very good opportunity for adults to set a good example of responsible alcohol consumption."

Kornet said the editorial was negatively slanted and cited the selectmen's ongoing support of the drug and alcohol committee as proof of their concern and commitment to fighting alcohol abuse.

The selectmen also pointed out that Sandy Beach is privately owned.

Resident Robert Davenport reminded selectmen the town bylaw also prohibits consumption of alcoholic beverages on private property to which the public has the right of access.

"Some day the town might become accountable for what they do," he cautioned.

Church gets town space

With their remodeling and addition project running behind schedule, the Second Congregational Church wasn't sure where the Sunday school classes would be meeting. Selectmen ended their worries by giving the church permission to hold classes in the town hall auditorium until the addition is complete.

The classes will meet in the auditorium Sept. 23 until Nov. 18 at the latest. The church will pay the usual rental fee of $25 per day until Oct. 1 and $35 per day thereafter.

The church custodian will clean the auditorium after each class.

The church will still need alternate space Sept. 16 and Nov. 4 when the auditorium is being set up for election day.

ALS meeting scheduled

The on-again/off-again meeting to plan for a regional Advanced Life Support ambulance is on tap for Sept. 12 at South Shore Hospital.

Cohasset's representatives to the five-town group are Fire Chief Daniel Brock and either Executive Secretary Greg Doyon or Selectman Diana Kornet. The other towns invited to participate are Hingham, Hull, Norwell and Scituate.

In an ALS service, sophisticated medical intervention is provided by paramedics in radio contact with a physician. Patient survival and full recovery rates are dramatically increased.

cited by the committee as proof that Cohasset was paying substantially more per capita for fire and emergency medical services did not include all costs.

"You don't have the whole story," selectmen Chairman Rocco Laugelle insisted.

"It's an apples and oranges comparison here," Selectman Ned Tebbetts said.

Firefighter Paul Bilodeau also contested the committee's contention that the town would get higher quality care with private ambulance service.

Bilodeau said he was living in Marshfield three years ago. Marshfield contracts with a private ambulance company. Bilodeau said his neighbor cut himself severely with a chainsaw and waited 25 minutes for the ambulance to arrive.

Bilodeau also said Marshfield relies on Scituate for back-up ambulance service when their "dedicated" ambulance is on a run.

Marshfield, it was said, has had three different private ambulance companies.

"On one run a day, they are not going to be able to survive," Bilodeau said. "It's a business like anything else."

The committee attempted to find fault with the fire department for buying a defibrillator in 1989, but not getting the training to use the live-saving equipment until recently.

Davenport told the selectmen the delay in training was the fault of South Shore Hospital, not the fire department. Brock told selectmen that all of his men would be trained on the defibrillator by the end of October.

"There is no private ambulance service operating with EMT-Ds (EMTs trained to use the defibrillator)," Brock said.

Developing a pool of call firefighters to offset cuts in the department was deemed unlikely by fire department personnel and residents.

"Years ago we had a call firefighter crew of 30. We have not been close to that in ten years," Brock said. He said one or two residents approach the department each month, but lose interest when they hear about the training requirements.

Selectman Jane Goedecke demanded to know if he was suggesting towns like Hanover could recruit call firefighters but Cohasset could not.

Brock suggested it was the difference between blue collar and white collar workers.

Executive Secretary Greg Doyon said in his experience, having lived and worked for both towns, there was a difference. Hanover had a tradition of call firefighters and a large number of residents who lived and worked in town.

"There is a lot to be said about each town being different," Doyon suggested.

John MacNeill told the selectmen he had been a call firefighter for 30 years in Cohasset, but his work in Waltham makes it impossible for him to respond to fire calls in any meaningful way.

"It's an hour's drive to get back here," he said.

Because of work commitments or locations, MacNeill said, only two or three call firefighters can respond to calls during daytime hours.

MacNeill, who has trained 500 EMTs in the past 12 years, also spoke to the quality of the EMTs working on a private ambulance.

"The turnover in the EMT ranks is very rapid," he said. Most EMTs only serve for two or three years.

MacNeill suggested a private duty EMT will get very bored with only one or two runs a day.

"They'll want to do something more exciting after a while."

Supporters of the town ambulance turned in some of the petitions which were circulated in the community. According to resident Ben Curley, the petitions turned in contained about 300 signatures. Many other petitions are still circulating around town.

Selectman Martha Gjesteby thought the petitions were somewhat misleading since they imply that the ambulance will be housed as far away as Marshfield rather than in town.

Arguments about quality of care was only one side of the ambulance service equation. Members of the advisory committee were interested in the cost effectiveness of the private versus public debate.

Advisory committee member Nan Roth reminded the selectmen of the financial state of the town.

"Our costs seem to be exceeding our revenues," she said. "We have to look at all our town services.

Dr. Robert Sceery told the selectmen he had been working as a physician in Cohasset for 37 years. In all his years of relying on the town ambulance to get his patients to the hospital, not one patient died.

"I want you as selectmen to think very seriously before you change the way you provide emergency medical care in this town," he said. "We can't find better trained people, kinder people, more caring people than we have here."

Aiming to enlist additional volunteers from each of the nine towns in the American Cancer Society South Shore Unit (Quincy, Milton, Braintree, Weymouth, Hingham, Norwell, Hull, Scituate, Cohasset), co-chairman Paula Cushner and Sharon Becker say the time commitment can be as little as two hours for the year.

Paint store promotes proper recycling

Rick Fletcher, manager of Hancock Paint and Varnish Company's Cohasset store announced today that the store will offer Cohasset residents a free clinic on environmentally sound paint brush cleaning. Store personnel will clean one brush per resident — free of charge — and explain the company's new paint and thinner recycling program. The clinic is part of Hancock's efforts to make customers more aware of the environmental harm caused by the careless disposal of paint and paint thinner.

"Each paint brush cleaned at home requires up to a half gallon of paint thinner, and the consumer frequently resorts to dumping the used thinner in the backyard or down the sink, thereby poisoning our water supply," said Fletcher. "Consumers who hate to clean messy brushes often buy cheap, disposable brushes that end up in landfills. Either way our environment suffers."

Hancock Paint and Varnish Co. has exclusive rights to a new, patented brush-cleaning machine that cleans up to six brushes at a time and uses 1/3 less mineral spirits (paint thinner) in the process. When the paint thinner is saturated with paint, Hancock recycles it back into the paint or thinner at their plant. This recycling process eliminates waste and disposal problems.

After the clinic on September 8, the brush cleaning service will be available at Hancock Paint locations for 99 cents. Brushes to be cleaned should have been used within the last 24 hours as this process cannot clean dry, caked-on paint.

Another example of the Hancock Paint and Varnish's commitment to the environment is the company's recycling program. Six months ago, Donald Heap, president of Hancock Paint and Varnish Co., launched a paint recycling program to encourage customers to return unused portions of paint purchased from Hancock Paint and Varnish Co., Hancock is the first paint company in the country to implement a recycling program.

"The average homeowner has eight partially filled cans of paint in his/her basement or garage," said Heap. "The only environmentally safe way to dispose of leftover paint is through recycling."

According to the state Department of Environmental Management, paint is the leading product consumers return during hazardous-waste collection drives. Currently, Massachusetts law only restricts the disposal of oil-based paint. However, latex paint can be just as detrimental when it is dumped into landfill as it too has the potential to seep into underground water supplies.

Hancock Paint and Varnish Co.'s recycling program is a responsible and easy alternative to home disposal. The company sells 350,000 gallons of a pint a year in its 12 New England stores and through six independent dealers. Heap estimates that 50,000 of the 325,00 gallons are sitting in cellars and garages with no further use. The average consumer, unaware of alternative means of paint disposal, frequently resorts to backyard or landfill disposal.

Hancock Paint will accept unused paint purchased at their retail stores after January 1. The cans are marked and easily identifiable as recyclable. To take advantage of the recycling program, retail customers simply return the unused paint and contribute $2 per can toward the disposal costs. The $2 donation represents half of the actual cost to remix and repackage recycled paint. Hancock Paint and Varnish Co. sees the additional cost of recycling as a charitable contribution to the environment and the community.

Hancock will recycle the paint by remixing it into grey utility paint. This paint is available in six shades of grey at a considerable savings to consumers. It is also sold to contractors who use it as primer. The bulk of this recycled paint will be donated to charitable organizations. Hancock has already donated 3,500 gallons of paint to 20 charitable organizations, among them the Salvation Army, Pine Street Inn, Long Island Hospital, Kingston House and Teen Challenge.

"Our company is willing to invest in the environment and the health of our customers," stated Fletcher.

Hancock Paint and Varnish Co., is a fourth generation family owned paint manufacturing and retail paint distributor. Call 383-9075 for paint recycling information.

AROUND TOWN

❑ We salute Michael B. Ludington this week! Mike, a 1989 graduate of Cohasset High School, has been promoted to airman in the Air Force.

❑ Hats off to William E. Baird who was awarded the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute's Rensselaer Medal.

❑ You may remember three weeks ago we had a tropical-type storm on a Saturday, the weather was really windy and rainy and warm. Well, Mrs. Morris McLoughlin of Lothrop Lane was walking her dog soon after it ended and spotted a dead bird in the road. The bird had a leg band on, so she knew that it must have some importance, and she took it off and went in to make some calls regarding it. The bird turned out to be a Racing Pigeon, so she called a local authority, Russell Burns, with the numbers on the band to see where it had originated from. He investigated, sent the numbers in, and said the pigeon came from Rome, New York! Its owner had released the bird in Harrisburg, PA to fly home to Rome, and it somehow got blown East about 500 miles!!

When the breeders release their birds, there is a device that will give the exact time it took them to return, which is located on the band that Mrs. McLoughlin found. You can see just how thorough these pigeon owners are, imagine receiving a letter from New York and being able to know exactly when the bird was released, where it was supposed to go, and how long it was supposed to take to get it there!!! Now that's what we call a nifty story!

❑ Happy birthday greetings go to Jeannine (Pompeo) Colburn this week!! May it be a grand one! Jeannine has already received the best news a gal can get, she's going to be a Mommy . . . isn't that a wonderful present that she's getting (and giving)??

❑ Another salute goes to Marine 1st Lt. Stephen M. Breen, a U Mass Boston graduate, who was recently designated a naval aviator.

Lynn Rizzoto's 1989 crop of artistes pose in the sunflower patch that inspired them.

❑ Jim and Brenda Litchfield had a wonderful reunion recently. Everyone remembers them, Jim was the former building inspector for Cohasset and they lived here for years! He was the Commander for the George H. Mealy Post for two years and Brenda was the Post's Auxiliary President for three years. Anyway, they returned to the town where they met during the war, Norwich, England, in July, and remembered their wartime romance. They met there, while she was a secretary in the British Air Ministry for an engineer in charge of Jim's base. They were part of a group of 800 people that were greeted when they arrived. There was a Mass held to remember the dead, George Bush sent a telegram to the dinner-dance that was held, and they relived a lot of memories while they stayed there. It sure sounds like there was a lot of fanfare, and a grand time must have been had by all.

❑ When a wonderful family leaves our town, mixed emotions always follow them. Such a family is the Leonard family, who moved to Stoughton recently. Jim and Noreen used to live on South Main Street, and then they moved to Doane Street. Everyone remembers their three children (now adults), Jim, Pat and Mary. The whole family contributed so much to our community, one might remember that Jim was instrumental in soccer programs and their conception! Their son Jim and daughter Mary both played soccer, while Pat opted for football. They are a wonderful family, and we will all miss them. Cohasset's loss is surely Stoughton's gain!

❑ Went to Sandy Beach last week, and we were greeted by Cohasset's "official Sandy Beach greeters", Marjorie and Fred Howe. What a pleasant way to start a nice day at the beach, one wonders how long they have been waving their greeting to all that step on to the beach . . . keep at it Fred and Marge, its wonderful!

❑ Don't forget the Christine Burke Scholarship Fund Clambake on Sept. 8 (raindate Sept. 9) from noon to sunset at Sandy Beach. There will be live entertainment with the Irish Volunteers, the meal includes lobster, chicken, steamers, chowder, corn, hot dogs and watermelon for the youngsters. The donation is $25 per person. For more information call 383-9657 or 383-0815.

❑ Joel and Jim Reidy left for their respective colleges last week, can you imagine how quiet things are at their house now? When just one leaves the silence is unbelievable, but two . . . at least Jen has the phone all to herself, something that will probably take a little getting used to!!

Her garden grows artists

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

If you ask Lynn Rizzoto how her garden grows, she'll tell you it's blooming with sunflowers, nasturtiums, bachelor's buttons and budding artists.

Rizzoto and her garden are located down a shady drive in the foothills of Turkey Hill in Hingham. For the last eight years, children from all over the South Shore have been flocking there to take art lessons through all the changing seasons.

Rizzoto is one of those rare individuals — she is an inspired teacher who can practice what she preaches. She has illustrated a wide assortment of children's books and textbooks. Her life's work demonstrates to the children how an artist moves from idea to sketch to finished product.

But Rizzoto considers the sun-dappled garden the real vehicle for artistic discovery.

"Before you can draw you have to be able to see. You have to be able to take things apart with your eyes," she tells the children.

One feature of her summer creativity workshops are the look/see tours of the garden. Sometimes Rizzoto conducts the tours, on other occasions she asks the children to "show" her what is blooming out there.

Rizzoto said the children constantly surprise her with their observations. This year she learned from the children that nasturtium leaves have a white star in the center, that the bud of another flower looks like a turtle (it really does!) and the petals of another flower are little flowers in their own right.

One "lesson" has the children take a flower apart and then use the parts to create a picture. Leaves, petals, stems and ferns can be combined in an incredible number of ways to create people, places and things.

Patrick Preston

One little girl used Queen Ann's Lace to create a beautiful bride. Now every time Rizzoto sees the flower she immediately things of wedding veils.

The children sketch what they see and they get to indulge their flights of fantasy. For the boys in her classes, fantasy usually comes in the guise of ninja

AROUND TOWN

❑ We salute Michael B. Ludington this week! Mike, a 1989 graduate of Cohasset High School, has been promoted to airman in the Air Force.

❑ Hats off to William E. Baird who was awarded the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute's Rensselaer Medal.

❑ You may remember three weeks ago we had a tropical-type storm on a Saturday, the weather was really windy and rainy and warm. Well, Mrs. Morris McLoughlin of Lothrop Lane was walking her dog soon after it ended and spotted a dead bird in the road. The bird had a leg band on, so she knew that it must have some importance, and she took it off and went in to make some calls regarding it. The bird turned out to be a Racing Pigeon, so she called a local authority, Russell Burns, with the numbers on the band to see where it had originated from. He investigated, sent the numbers in, and said the pigeon came from Rome, New York! Its owner had released the bird in Harrisburg, PA to fly home to Rome, and it somehow got blown East about 500 miles!!

When the breeders release their birds, there is a device that will give the exact time it took them to return, which is located on the band that Mrs. McLoughlin found. You can see just how thorough these pigeon owners are, imagine receiving a letter from New York and being able to know exactly when the bird was released, where it was supposed to go, and how long it was supposed to take to get it there!!! Now that's what we call a nifty story!

❑ Happy birthday greetings go to Jeannine (Pompeo) Colburn this week!! May it be a grand one! Jeannine has already received the best news a gal can get, she's going to be a Mommy . . . isn't that a wonderful present that she's getting (and giving)??

❑ Another salute goes to Marine 1st Lt. Stephen M. Breen, a U Mass Boston graduate, who was recently designated a naval aviator.

Lynn Rizzoto's 1989 crop of artistes pose in the sunflower patch that inspired them.

❑ Jim and Brenda Litchfield had a wonderful reunion recently. Everyone remembers them, Jim was the former building inspector for Cohasset and they lived here for years! He was the Commander for the George H. Mealy Post for two years and Brenda was the Post's Auxiliary President for three years. Anyway, they returned to the town where they met during the war, Norwich, England, in July, and remembered their wartime romance. They met there, while she was a secretary in the British Air Ministry for an engineer in charge of Jim's base. They were part of a group of 800 people that were greeted when they arrived. There was a Mass held to remember the dead, George Bush sent a telegram to the dinner-dance that was held, and they relived a lot of memories while they stayed there. It sure sounds like there was a lot of fanfare, and a grand time must have been had by all.

❑ When a wonderful family leaves our town, mixed emotions always follow them. Such a family is the Leonard family, who moved to Stoughton recently. Jim and Noreen used to live on South Main Street, and then they moved to Doane Street. Everyone remembers their three children (now adults), Jim, Pat and Mary. The whole family contributed so much to our community, one might remember that Jim was instrumental in soccer programs and their conception! Their son Jim and daughter Mary both played soccer, while Pat opted for football. They are a wonderful family, and we will all miss them. Cohasset's loss is surely Stoughton's gain!

❑ Went to Sandy Beach last week, and we were greeted by Cohasset's "official Sandy Beach greeters", Marjorie and Fred Howe. What a pleasant way to start a nice day at the beach, one wonders how long they have been waving their greeting to all that step on to the beach . . . keep at it Fred and Marge, its wonderful!

❑ Don't forget the Christine Burke Scholarship Fund Clambake on Sept. 8 (raindate Sept. 9) from noon to sunset at Sandy Beach. There will be live entertainment with the Irish Volunteers, the meal includes lobster, chicken, steamers, chowder, corn, hot dogs and watermelon for the youngsters. The donation is $25 per person. For more information call 383-9657 or 383-0815.

❑ Joel and Jim Reidy left for their respective colleges last week, can you imagine how quiet things are at their house now? When just one leaves the silence is unbelievable, but two . . . at least Jen has the phone all to herself, something that will probably take a little getting used to!!

Mosquito post-mortem

The state's decision to expand aerial spraying for mosquitos throughout Plymouth County – even dosing Cohasset, which is part of Norfolk County – is something we have to approve.

A young boy from Marshfield remains at New England Medical Center in Boston where he is being treated for Eastern equine encephalitis.

We've heard all the arguments about the dangers of the chemical used to poison the mosquitos – that many other living things will die from the maliathon – that some mosquitos will live – that the chemical is extremely toxic – that the true extent of the danger from the chemical isn't even known.

But a 7-year-old boy with his whole life ahead of him came down with this often fatal disease. Doctors are not yet sure whether he suffered any permanent damage. He does have problems with memory and cognitive skills, according to the experts.

We've heard the argument that the $1 million the spraying cost could better be used for prenatal care or other preventative medicine.

We're all in favor of spending government money on cost effective measures.

But we're also in favor of taking action to prevent an epidemic.

The outrage is the process the state followed in determining where and how the spraying would be done.

The decision was put off too long, the information about the plans were released too late and the actual implementation verged on criminal neglect.

The three planes were still in the air spraying Hingham and Cohasset at 9 a.m. – one whole hour after the work was supposed to be complete.

The communication process between the state and the selectmen and board of health was appalling. Indeed, the communication process could scarcely be said to exist.

Local officials made calls to state officials to find out what was happening. Between their calls and the information in the news media, they did what they could to keep on top of the situation. But the effort should have been the other way around.

More than a month ago the Plymouth County Mosquito Control Project issued warnings about mosquitos carrying Eastern equine encephalitis.

The state sat on the information. Some state officials talked about spraying. Finally a decision was made to spray communities west of Route 3.

At some point the decision changed and the spraying area broadened. It seemed the final changes that included Hingham and Cohasset in the spraying were made at the last minute.

True, there were several days notice before the aerial spraying got underway.

Cohasset selectmen met twice in that time, listening to concerned residents, but admitting there was nothing they could do to stop the spraying if they wanted to,

There are other ways of killing mosquitos besides using the toxic and potentially carcinogenic chemical maliathon.

We think it's time for the state to begin planning next year's campaign against the insects.

It's time to get the ducks in line.

Hotel manager blasts board member

Letters

To the Editor:

Michael Sullivan's letter of Aug. 29 regarding our newly erected sign on the corner of 3A and Sohier St. was full of inaccuracies, untruths and inflammatory rhetoric. The sign was properly and legally applied for and approved by the Town of Cohasset's building inspector, the municipal official employed to interpret, review and issue sign permits accordingly. It conforms in detail to the zoning code of Cohasset. That does not violate the "authenticity of this town" — that's just fact.

It has replaced a structurely higher, diminished, barely legible, graphically inferior product. It is a clean, crisp and professional directional sign located appropriately in the commercial zone, that assists in the proper vehicular flow of interested traffic.

Further, Kimball's By The Sea is a cohesive partner with this community, extending itself in every possible way to adequately enhance that relationship. For Mr. Sullivan to suggest a general "boycott" of this entity, due to his personal disdain for that sign, is an opinion that grossly exceeds the parameters of "free speech," — a pursuit for which we all have equal access.

General Manager
Kimball's By The Sea

Former student decries budget cuts

(Ed. note: A copy of this letter to the Cohasset school committee was sent to the Mariner for publication.)

This letter is being written to express my concern about the cuts in the industrial arts program.

As a student of Cohasset High School I was able to take full advantage of the industrial arts program. For myself, shop class was the one class that motivated me to finish high school.

It is important to maintain a full curriculum, including industrial arts. I believe these classes are as important as college preparatory courses. Many real life skills can be acquired and become useful at one time or another. Due to the skills I developed in the industrial arts program, I was able to pursue a successful career in the trades immediately after graduating from high school.

I am urging the Cohasset School Committee to reconsider its decision regarding the cut-backs in the industrial arts program and reinstate it to full capacity. Give the young people of today the opportunity to learn how to work with their hands as well as their minds.

Enclosed is a list of several former Cohasset High School students that share my concern about the cut-backs in the industrial arts program, many of whom have pursued successful careers in the trades.

Selectmen express spraying concerns

(Ed note: The board of selectmen released the following statement on malathion spraying for publication.)

Due to the recently diagnosed encephalitis in a Marshfield boy and the threat that many more people could be infected by diseased mosquitoes, we supported the State's decision for aerial spraying in Cohasset.

However, we are quite concerned that the State Public Health and Mosquito Control Agencies have not more adequately publicized the health risks that are associated with this spraying. We are also quite upset about the very short notice that was given to Cohasset for this spraying.

State authorities have clearly stated that encephalitis risks will continue to be present even after the aerial spraying has been completed. We encourage Cohasset people to use repellants and wear adequate clothing when exposed to large numbers of mosquitoes.

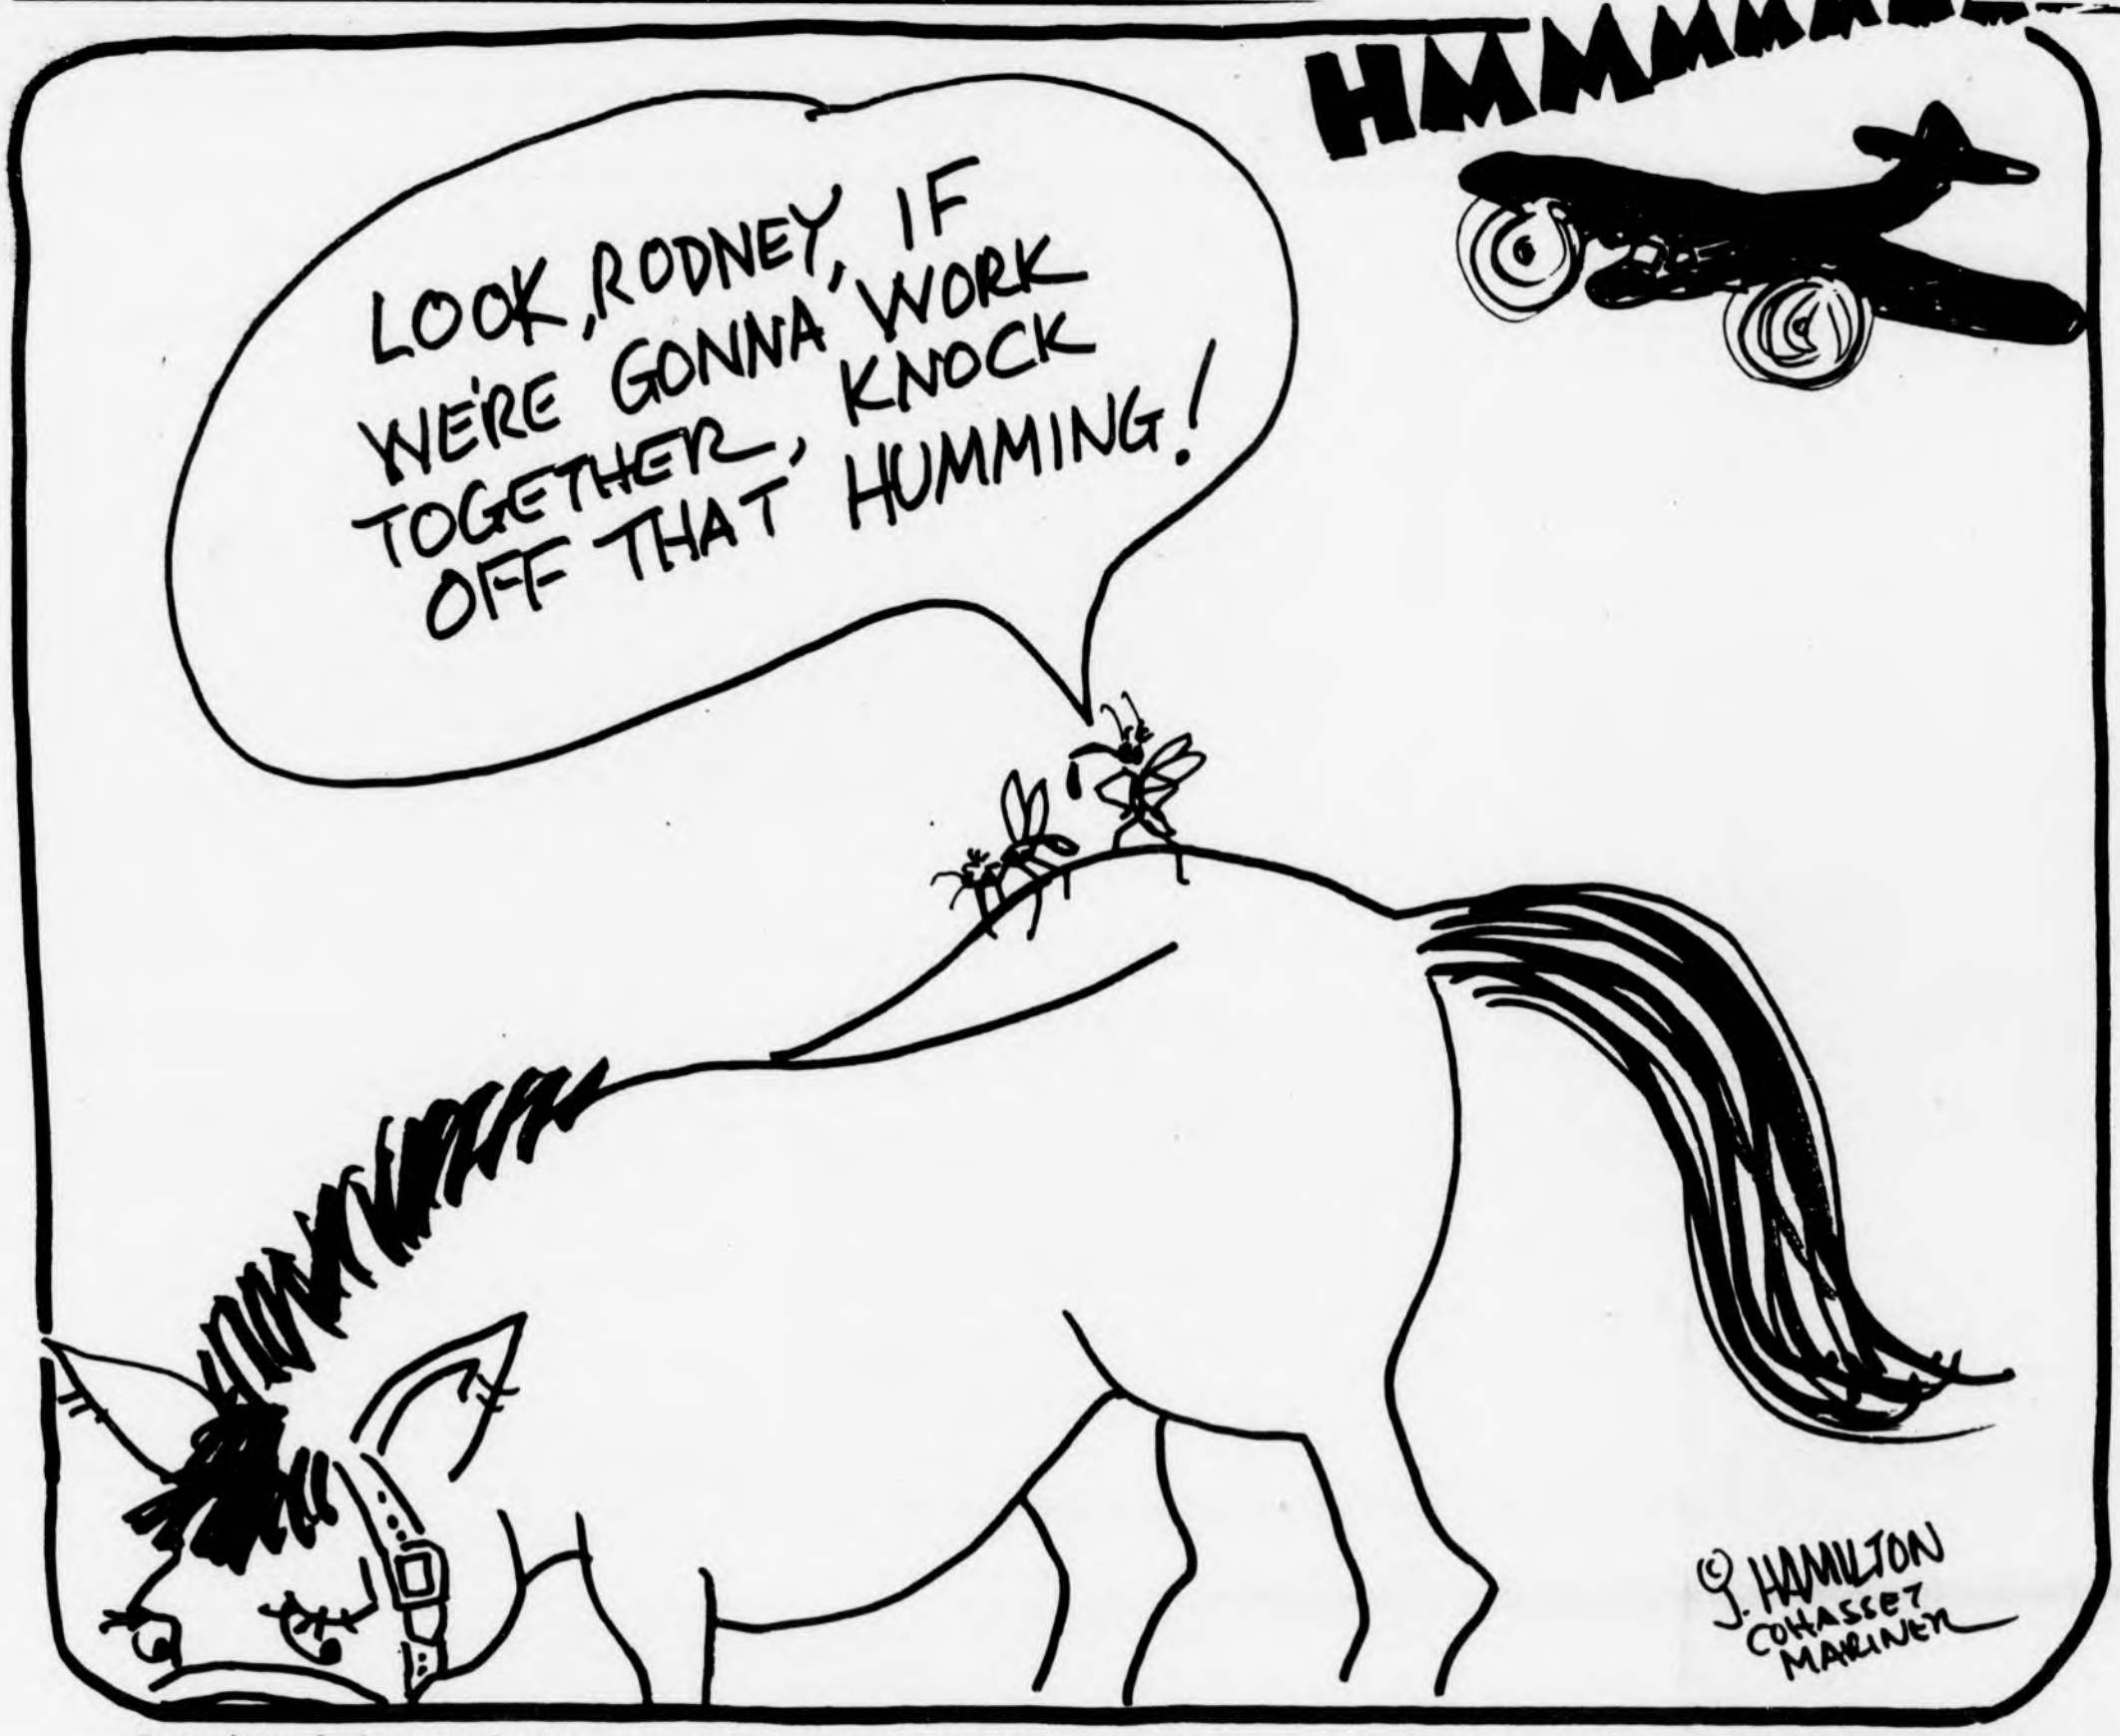
Hazardous wastes collected on Sept. 15

A household hazardous waste collection day is scheduled for 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday, Sept. 15, in the parking lot of the junior/senior high school.



The board of health is sponsoring this hazardous waste collection for Cohasset residents only.

The town appropriated $12,000 for the collection. The Norfolk County Conservation District contributed a $1,000 grant towards the project.

The collection is the third for Cohasset but collections in the past have been regional.

A list of all items to be accepted will appear in the Cohasset Mariner next week.

The board of health advises residents to try to use substitutes for hazardous substances to avoid the cost of future collections.

In spite of plenty of advance notice, some Cohasset residents were taken by surprise by the Wednesday morning malathion mosquito spraying.

Last week our small town was united under one common environmental event — the spraying of Malathion from airplanes.

The state department of public health ordered the spraying to eradicate mosquitoes carrying the disease Eastern Equine Encephalitis. We were told they would use a 3-ounce per acre Malathion solution, that the planes would fly between the hours of 5:30 a.m. to 8 a.m. and 5:30 p.m. to 8 p.m. and only if it was not rainy, foggy or the wind was not over seven m.p.h.

As I made my way through the village this week, everyone seemed to be talking about the spraying. I'll share some of my gleanings with you.

- "I am for the spraying. I have had my horses inoculated, but I am concerned about their health."
- "I used to have bees all around my flowers — now there aren't any."
- "I want the spraying. We have a terrible mosquito problem in our backyard."
- "I thought they weren't going to spray us. It was after 8 a.m. when my husband went out to uncover our vegetable garden — that's when the planes went over."
- "We took our family out Tuesday night, the evening before they sprayed, to listen to the insects and birds. We were surprised how much more than mosquitoes we heard."
- "After the spraying, the bees were all over my walkway dying."
- "I'd like to hang the environmentalists by their feet, stick them outside and see how they like being bitten by mosquitoes."
- "People scream about the ineptness of the state when it comes to fiscal matters, but when it comes to spraying, the same people say the state's an expert."
- "We were able to get an exemption from spraying because of our organic farm. We would not have been able to be certified organic for three years after the spraying, and the Malathion would have wiped out all the beneficial insects."
- "A million dollars could have been better spent."
- "The spraying was a complete cover-up by the state. The officials had not done their homework on mosquito control over the years."
- "The spraying was such a chemical "quick fix," so short term. The next batch of mosquito larvae will be out in about a week. The counties usually spray the larvae, but there have been many cutbacks in their budgets."

Friends of the Council of Aging meeting

The Friends of the Council on Aging will hold a meeting of the general membership Thursday, Sept. 13 from 3:45 to 5 p.m at the Senior Center, 3 North Main Street. The agenda includes planning fall fund-raising events and discussing strategies for increasing membership.

The organization was formed two years ago to provide financial support to the Council on Aging in its efforts to bring community services and programs to Cohasset's senior population through the senior center.

Led by an eight-member board of directors and a general membership of 40, the Friends have helped pay for the printing and mailing costs of the Council's newsletter, Vista, handicapped transportation and course instructors at the center. Funding has come primarily from memorial gifts, dues and donations from a fund-raising letter.

At the annual meeting held in June, a new slate of officers was elected for the current year. Officers are Karin Bartow, president; Susan Connolly, vice president; Marjorie Murphy, secretary and Margaret Smart, treasurer. Members-at-large are Joseph Buckley, Paul Donovan, Peter Logan and Ray Remick.

Newcomers are welcome and participation is encouraged. For more information, call Karin Bartow at 383-0572.

Motorist's Alert

Cohasset's future — it's children — started back to school this week. The youngsters will be out on the sidewalks and getting on and off buses for the next nine months. Their safety is in your hands.

Please obey the speed limits in town and watch out for the little ones who are apt to dart into the street when you least expect it.

Don't park your car so you block sidewalks and force youngsters to walk out into the street to get by your car.

We know you're in a hurry to get to work or to the store, but a moment's carelessness by you could mean a lifetime of heartache if you strike and kill a child. Nowhere you have to be is worth that price.

BULLETIN BOARD

Candidates' night cancelled

The South Shore Coalitions' Candidates' Night scheduled for Sept. 6 at Norwell High School has been cancelled.

All ten candidates for Governor and Lt. Governor were invited to participate in this regional forum which was to be co-sponsored by the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, the Leagues of Women Voters of Hingham, Scituate, and Weymouth and the SSC.

Originally it was expected that all the candidates, both Republicans and Democrats, would be present to take part in the event. However, in the past two weeks a number of the candidates changed their schedules and were no longer available to come to the south shore.

Because of these changes the sponsoring groups regretfully decided to cancel the entire program.

Volunteers needed

South Shore elders need your help.

If you have some time to give, South Shore Elder Services Inc. can put your talents to work. Various volunteer activities are available. Some of the needs include delivering meals to homebound elders, working in congregate meal sites, socializing with isolated elders, serving as an advocate for nursing home residents and providing telephone reassurance to homecare clients.

In order to continue providing services to elders, South Shore Elder Services must rely on volunteers. This is a private non-profit agency dedicated to providing services to seniors, 60 years of age and older, residing in Braintree, Cohasset, Hingham, Holbrook, Hull, Milton, Norwell, Quincy, Randolph, Scituate and Weymouth. Time commitments are flexible and volunteering is rewarding.

For more information, call Joyce Birks Fallon at 848-3910 ext. 316.

PSO drug abuse program

The Cohasset Parent School Organization opens the new school year with a program on drug and alcohol abuse for parents and the community at large. Derek Sanderson is the featured speaker.

Sanderson, the former Boston Bruin great, is a recovering substance abuser. He will speak about his life experiences with drug and alcohol dependency. Students of an appropriate age are encouraged to attend to facilitate family discussion on the effects of substance abuse.

The program is slated for Sept. 20 in the Cohasset high school auditorium. Coffee and refreshments will be available at 7:30 p.m. Sanderson will speak at 8 p.m. Admission is free.

Co-op 6 hosts auction

Current Democratic leaders and those campaigning for state and local offices will be among the guest auctioneers at the Co-op 6 annual auction on September 8 in Scituate.

Co-op 6 is a coalition of the Democratic Town Committees from Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, Marshfield, Scituate and Weymouth. The auction is Co-op 6's premier fund-raiser of the year and attendance this year is expected to be greater than usual because the event falls less than two weeks before the state primary.

Every Democratic Party leader, current official and statewide candidate has been invited to donate an item to the auction. In the past, many have chosen to attend the auction and gavel down the items themselves, including, for the past several years, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

Besides donations from prominent Democrats, the auction will feature more than 60 unique items donated by South Shore individuals and merchants. A silent auction will also be part of the fun.

The auction will be held at the Knights of Columbus Hall on Route 3A in Scituate. Tickets are $5 per person and may be purchased from Democratic Town Committee members in the Co-op 6 towns. A limited number of tickets will also be available at the door.

For more information, call 925-9266.

Soccer athlete honored at Fenway

Bill Baird of Cohasset was awarded the Bay State Games/Bank of Boston "Lead By Example" Scholarship at an on-field presentation at Fenway Park, before the July 31 Red Sox game.

Baird was a member of the Bay State Games Southeast Boys-Scholastic Soccer team which competed at M.I.T. during the Games Finals. In addition to his accomplishments at the Bay State Games, Bill competes in wrestling, baseball and lacrosse at Cohasset High School. He is also a member of the National Honor Society, a peer counselor and the founder of Cohasset's CVS (community volunteer service).

The "Lead By Example" scholarships, created and funded by the Bank of Boston in 1987 for Bay State Games participants, recognize exceptional high school juniors who inspire others through their participation and achievements in school, athletics and their communities.

The Massachusetts Amateur Sports Foundation's mission is to provide opportunities for the education and development of the young people of Massachusetts. The combined efforts of Bank of Boston and the Bay State Games result in six regional winners and two statewide winners selected to receive $30,000 in scholarships towards their college education.

MARINER SPORTS

High school sports heat up for a new season

By David McKee
Mariner staff

The temperature was close to 90 degrees and it was a perfect day for the beach on the last Monday in August. However, many Cohasset High School students had other things on their minds as practices officially got underway for the '90 Fall athletic season.

And while the Red Sox have six to eight weeks to get ready for their regular season games, high school teams have at most, two weeks. This means that the athletes will have to get busy the first week of practice in order to get off to a good start.

The athletes at Cohasset High School were no exception as the sub-varsity football, soccer, and field hockey teams all worked hard at the high school to get into shape and lose a summer's worth of rust.

Most of the teams at Cohasset High School held double sessions in order to work on conditioning. This meant the athletes would have a practice early in the morning. Then after a break of several hours, would be back in the afternoon to have another practice. Double sessions are nothing new to athletes as even the New England Patriots use this technique to get their players into game shape.

Cohasset High School field hockey coach Debbie Bostwick worked her team hard during the first week of practices.

"It was cool out and not that hot and with the weather cooperating we were able to get a lot of work done," she said. "We worked on getting in shape and some skill drills."

Bostwick had more than 40 athletes participating in the double sessions held last week. The first session ran from 8-10 a.m. with the second session from 2-4 p.m.

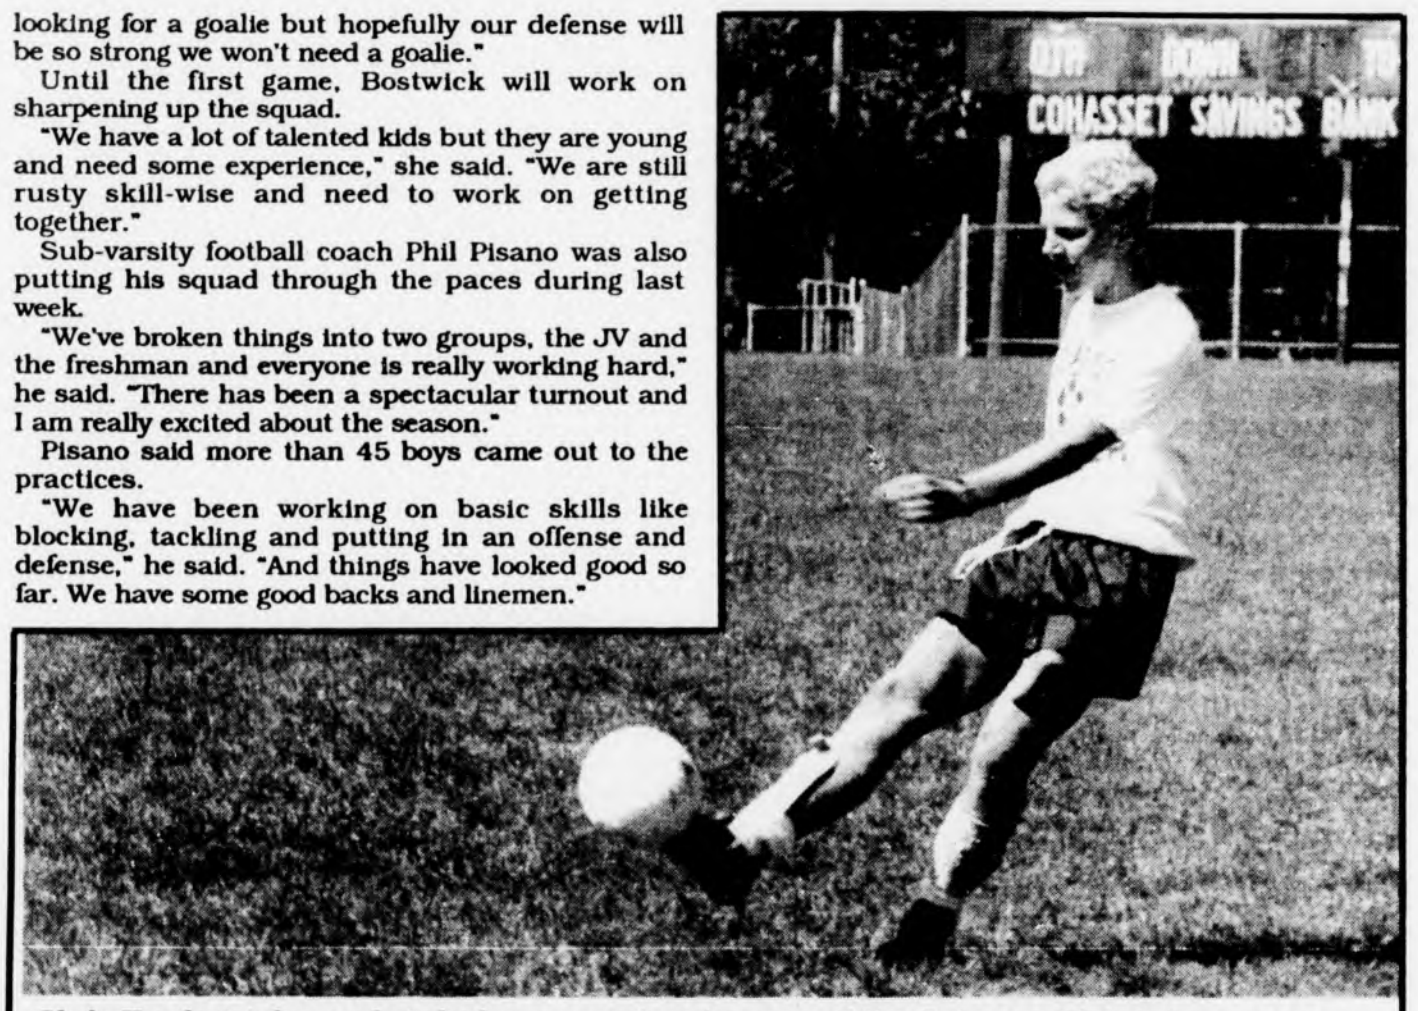
Bostwick was pleased that the players reported to practice in good shape.

"The kids were prepared for practice," Bostwick said. "Some captain's practices were held and the players used that time to focus on conditioning. That was important because during practices I kept the kids running and if they didn't keep up then they were losing out."

The team will scrimmage Dedham and Scituate before they open the season against Norwell on Sept. 18.

"We have a strong defense and I'm pleased with what I have seen so far," Bostwick said. "We still are looking for a goalie but hopefully our defense will be so strong we won't need a goalie."

Until the first game, Bostwick will work on sharpening up the squad.



"We have a lot of talented kids but they are young and need some experience," she said. "We are still rusty skill-wise and need to work on getting together."

Sub-varsity football coach Phil Pisano was also putting his squad through the paces during last week.

"We've broken things into two groups, the JV and the freshman and everyone is really working hard," he said. "There has been a spectacular turnout and I am really excited about the season."

Pisano said more than 45 boys came out to the practices.

"We have been working on basic skills like blocking, tackling and putting in an offense and defense," he said. "And things have looked good so far. We have some good backs and linemen."

Chris Kondrat takes a shot during a recent scrimmage of the Cohasset High School soccer team. It's a sure bet that Cohasset will have another championship season in 1990.
(Staff photo by John Stobierski)

The JV squad will be scrimmaging Hingham later this week and will participate in the South Shore League Jamboree this Friday night at Rockland High School. The JV's will be going up against the varsity squad from Carver and Hull.

The freshmen squad will be scrimmaging Norwell this weekend.

Pisano was pleased with the condition of the players reporting to the first practices.

"The kids came in fairly good shape," he said. "Several of them attended camps and a lot of them worked on running and weight training during the summer and that has been a big help."

The sub-varsity has their first official game on Sept. 13. Until then Pisano will be working with his team.

"We will be working on all aspects of the game," he said. "We have young players, so it will take time. But I like what I have seen so far and I think that many people will be surprised by the level of our play."

SENIOR CORNER

By Kathy Bryanton
Special to the Mariner

September is a great month for...Welcoming back to Cohasset our fellow Council on Aging friends who have been away on vacation this summer. For some, September signifies a time when we enjoy the colorful foliage, cooler temperatures, and back to school shopping with our wonderful grandchildren. Believe it or not, September is also National Sight Saving Month, National Clock Month, and National Farm Safety Month, and is packed with more celebrations: Labor Day 9/3; Grandparent's Day 9/10; Rosh Hashanah 9/20; Banned Books Week 9/23-9/30; National Good Neighbors Day 9/25; Yom Kippur 9/29—But among the clocks, banned books, good neighbors and a host of other sundry titles, September should be remembered, above all, as National Cholesterol Education Month.

The purpose of this month's activities, will be to encourage the public to get to know the council!

We cordially invite you to attend the celebration of "Senior Sampler Day" on September 25, 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the Senior Center, 3 No. Main St., Cohasset. A buffet will be served at noon. Some of the day's events: Cholesterol Screening, Hingham V.N.A., 10 to noon, fee $6. Call for an appointment, 383-9112. Walking Club sign-up with the leader, 10 a.m. Get ready, get set, let's go! To the Governor's Cup '90 on Sunday, October 14, in Boston. Come to the center on 9/25 and learn more about this year's road race.

Exercise classes, bowling, dance classes, first aid classes—Let's get healthy! If you have stayed away because you are not sure you can do a new project, come to our "Sampler Day" and meet the instructors. You can ask your questions about the following classes: Arts & Crafts, Bridge, Beginners and Intermediate Painting classes, Knitting, Quilting, Gourmet Club, Men's Breakfast Club. We are always open to your suggestions for new classes, especially if you know of an instructor—just let us know! Other opportunities: be a volunteer—Sign up with one of our board members to: teach a class, drive the van, answer the phone at the center, be a Shine volunteer or be a friend to a friend.

If you were born in September come to lunch, 23 No. Main St., Tuesday, noon, and celebrate with friends and share the birthday cake. A bake table with lots of goodies from the Gourmet Cooking Club will also be available at 23 No. Main Street.

UP-DATE-ON-OUTREACH PROGRAM—CARE FOR ELDERS SEMINAR: SUPPORT & OPTIONS

There are many people today caring for spouses, mothers, fathers, older family members or friends. They are called "Care-Givers." The Council on Aging is pleased to announce that this fall, October 2, 9, 16, 23, 30, we will be hosting a five-week seminar called "Caring for Elders at Home." Each session will offer information and discussion based on questions you have asked in the past. Time: 7 to 9 p.m.

1. Physical changes in older people
2. Where can I receive help when I need it?
3. How I can help my parents?

The two hour long discussion will provide an eye-opening overview of the many issues and options involved with caring for elders at home today. Outreach worker, Susan Connolly, welcomes input to this program that will be held at the South Shore Art Center in October. All are welcome to join us. If you need further information, please call Sue at 383-9112 on Wednesday, 10 to 2 p.m.

COFFEE HOUR IN SEPTEMBER WITH JOYCE

According to Erma Bombeck, "Volunteers don't contribute to our civilization, they are our civilization, our salvation! They are the only human beings on the face of the earth who reflect the nation's compassion, unselfishness, caring, patience, need, and just plain love for one another. It frightens me somehow to imagine what the world would be without them." Please come to our Volunteer Coffee Hour on Tuesday, September 18, at 23 North Main Street, 10 a.m. and meet Joyce Birks-Fallon, Director of Volunteers at South Shore Elder Services. She will discuss with us the many opportunities there are today to become a volunteer for the Council on Aging. This coffee hour is for all volunteers, past, present and future, come and listen!

"It is a funny thing about life: If you refuse to accept anything but the best, you very often get it."

FISH

Fish is a group of townspeople organized to help their neighbors in time of need. We provide drivers for people unable to get to appointments (mostly medical) by the usual means. Most of our clients are elderly or cannot drive, and have no other service available to them. Our volunteers give one day a month, and often extra time if other drivers are needed. We make two or three calls a day, including trips to Boston and other area hospitals.

The service operates Monday through Friday. We request clients to call our answering service (545-7073) at least two days in advance if at all possible. This enables the driver to get an emergency driver if conflicts arise. Calls for Monday appointments should be made by the preceding Friday noon, as it is very difficult to contact people on weekends. We request that people with Cohasset appointments use the Senior Shuttle whenever possible.

Fish services are free of charge. We are happy to accept donations to help cover our expenses. Clients pay any parking charges, and may make arrangements on gas with the driver if it is a particularly long run.

We are always glad to sign up new recruits, especially for emergency drivers. If you can drive occasionally when the regular driver is already booked, please call Doris McNulty (383-1886).

Teacher appointments

The Cohasset Public Schools is pleased to announce the appointment of four teachers at the Osgood and Deer Hill Schools for the 1990-1991 school year. Three teachers will be joining the Osgood Faculty: Cynthia Hurley, Grade 1; Patrice Donnelly, Grade 2; and Barbara Wells, Grade. 2. Judith Ritts will be joining the Deer Hill staff as a Resource Room teacher.

Hurley, a resident of Cohasset, has served as a substitute in the primary grades in the Cohasset Schools for several years and as a permanent substitute last year in the first grade. She received a Bachelor of Arts from Emmanuel College and a Masters of Education from Boston College.

Wells has extensive experience teaching in grades 1-3 and was the recipient of the R1 Mathematics Recognition Award for teaching mathematics (1990) and of the Providence Journal-Bulletin Reading Encouragement Grant (1990). She earned a Bachelor of Arts in Elementary Education from the State University College of New York, Potsdam and has completed graduate work in the areas of Mathematics and learning disabilities.

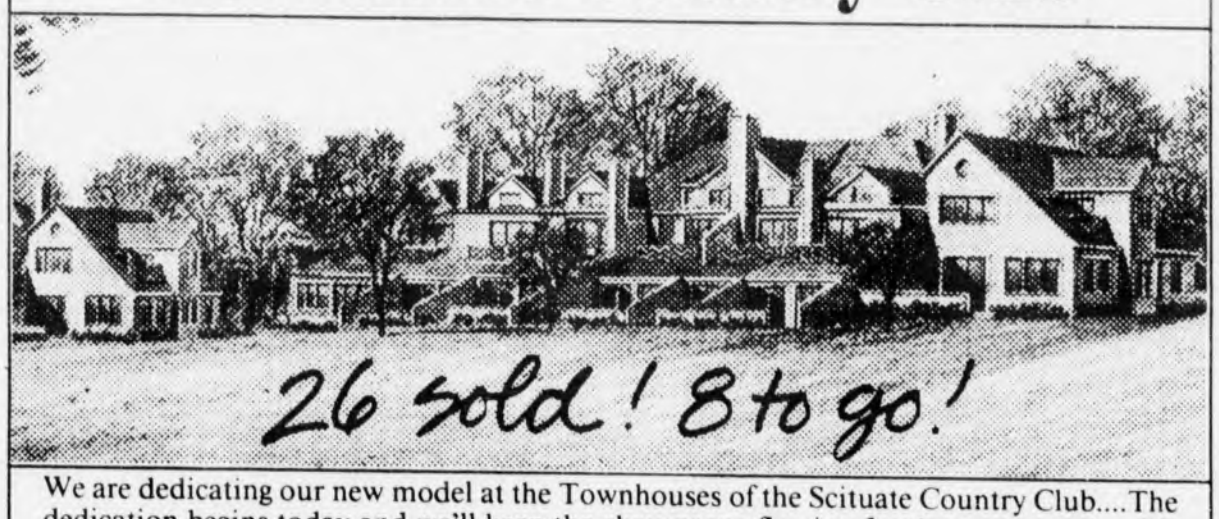
Donnelly comes to Cohasset having completed a Bachelor of Science from Cornell University in Psychology and a Masters Degree in teaching from Simmons College. She has served as a teaching assistant at the college level and has taught in enrichment programs in the Norwood and Sharon Public Schools.

Ritts, a Cohasset resident, has a range of experiences working with children of different ages and special needs. She received a Bachelor of Arts in Sociology from Ohio University and a Masters Degree from Lesley College in Special Needs.

Summer work for student

Leanne Ward, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Ward of Beechwood Street, is spending the summer working at Marriot Hotel in Alexandria, Va. through the Cooperative Education Program at the University of Massachusetts.

Ward is working at the front desk acting as liaison to the housekeeper staff, taking reservations and helping with guests.



"Cooperative education is the entry to work in the professional world," Joan Stoia, director of the Cooperative Education Program, said. "Students spend four to six months working in industry, business or government. After graduation, almost half the students go back to the company they worked for through our program."

Ward, a senior, is majoring in hotel, restaurant and travel administration.

Chiropractic for Health

by Dr. Debra M. Tranberg & Dr. Susan Emmer
Chiropractors

SILENT TESTIMONY

One of the tenents in the practice of chiropractic is that each organ in the body has a corresponding nerve that guides its function. Each of these nerves passes through an opening in the vertebra. Were this opening to become distorted in some way, an impingement on the nerve may result which would adversely affect the functioning of the corresponding organ. In 1921, research published in the MEDICAL TIMES was undertaken by an M.D. in an effort to either prove or disprove this theory. To this end, Dr. Winsor performed autopsies on 75 human cadavers. His findings: A greater than 90 percent correlation between diseased human organs and misalignments in the area of the spinal column where corresponding nerves passed to those organs. Since that time, corroborating studies have shown the relationship between a healthy spine and overall good health.

Chiropractic provides a drugless, knifeless and natural approach to meeting your body's needs for a state of well-being. With experienced applications, DR. DEBRA M. TRANBERG, SCITUATE HARBOR CHIROPRACTIC, 80 Front St., Scituate, 545-7388, and DR. SUSAN EMMER, CHIROPRACTIC & FAMILY WELLNESS CARE, 87 Sohier St., Cohasset, 383-1330, offers the opportunity to deal with misalignment and thus correct the problems of the nerve network so that healing instructions can once again be transmitted. By appointment. Workers Comp. cases and most insurance plans accepted.

P.S. In the 20 years of heart diseases studies by Dr. Winsor, all had misalignment of the upper five thoracic vertebrae.

turtles and jet planes at first. Before long they get hooked on other possibilities.

Having other boys to hang out and draw with is reassuring for the boys in her class. They learn that it's all right to be interested in something besides sports.

"I catch them, and they want to do more," Rizzoto explains.

In the course of the five-week programs, the children get to experiment with watercolors, tempera paints, clay, pen and ink, collage, stamp art and anything else that comes to hand. They work out in the garden, on the porch — or in Rizzoto's comfy country kitchen when the weather turns cold and wet.

When they finish a product, they can hang it on the wall, wear it or sleep on it — tee shirts and pillow cases are among their favorite "canvases."

The age range of her classes is pre-school to teen. The only requirement is the ability to sit and concentrate. Sometimes the three-year-olds are better at that then the ten-year-olds.

"The teens are more into realism, not fantasy. They are interested in learning the technique," Rizzoto said.

The age range of her classes is pre-school to teen. The only requirement is the ability to sit and concentrate. Sometimes the three-year-olds are better at that then the ten-year-olds.

"The teens are more into realism, not fantasy. They are interested in learning the technique," Rizzoto said.

Learning how to use the various media is essential to enjoying the work — and feeling like you have control over your artistic endeavors, she said. Too often children are given paints or chalks in school or at home, but not shown how to use them. They become frustrated and get "turned off" to art because they think they "can't do it."

Rizzoto tries to show them that art is process more than product. She brings examples of work done by artists in their eighties and nineties to show the children that you can always learn a new way to do something or refine your technique.

"I tell them they're not going to learn unless they do it a couple of times," Rizzoto said. And her pencils have no erasers because she doesn't believe anything is a mistake in art.

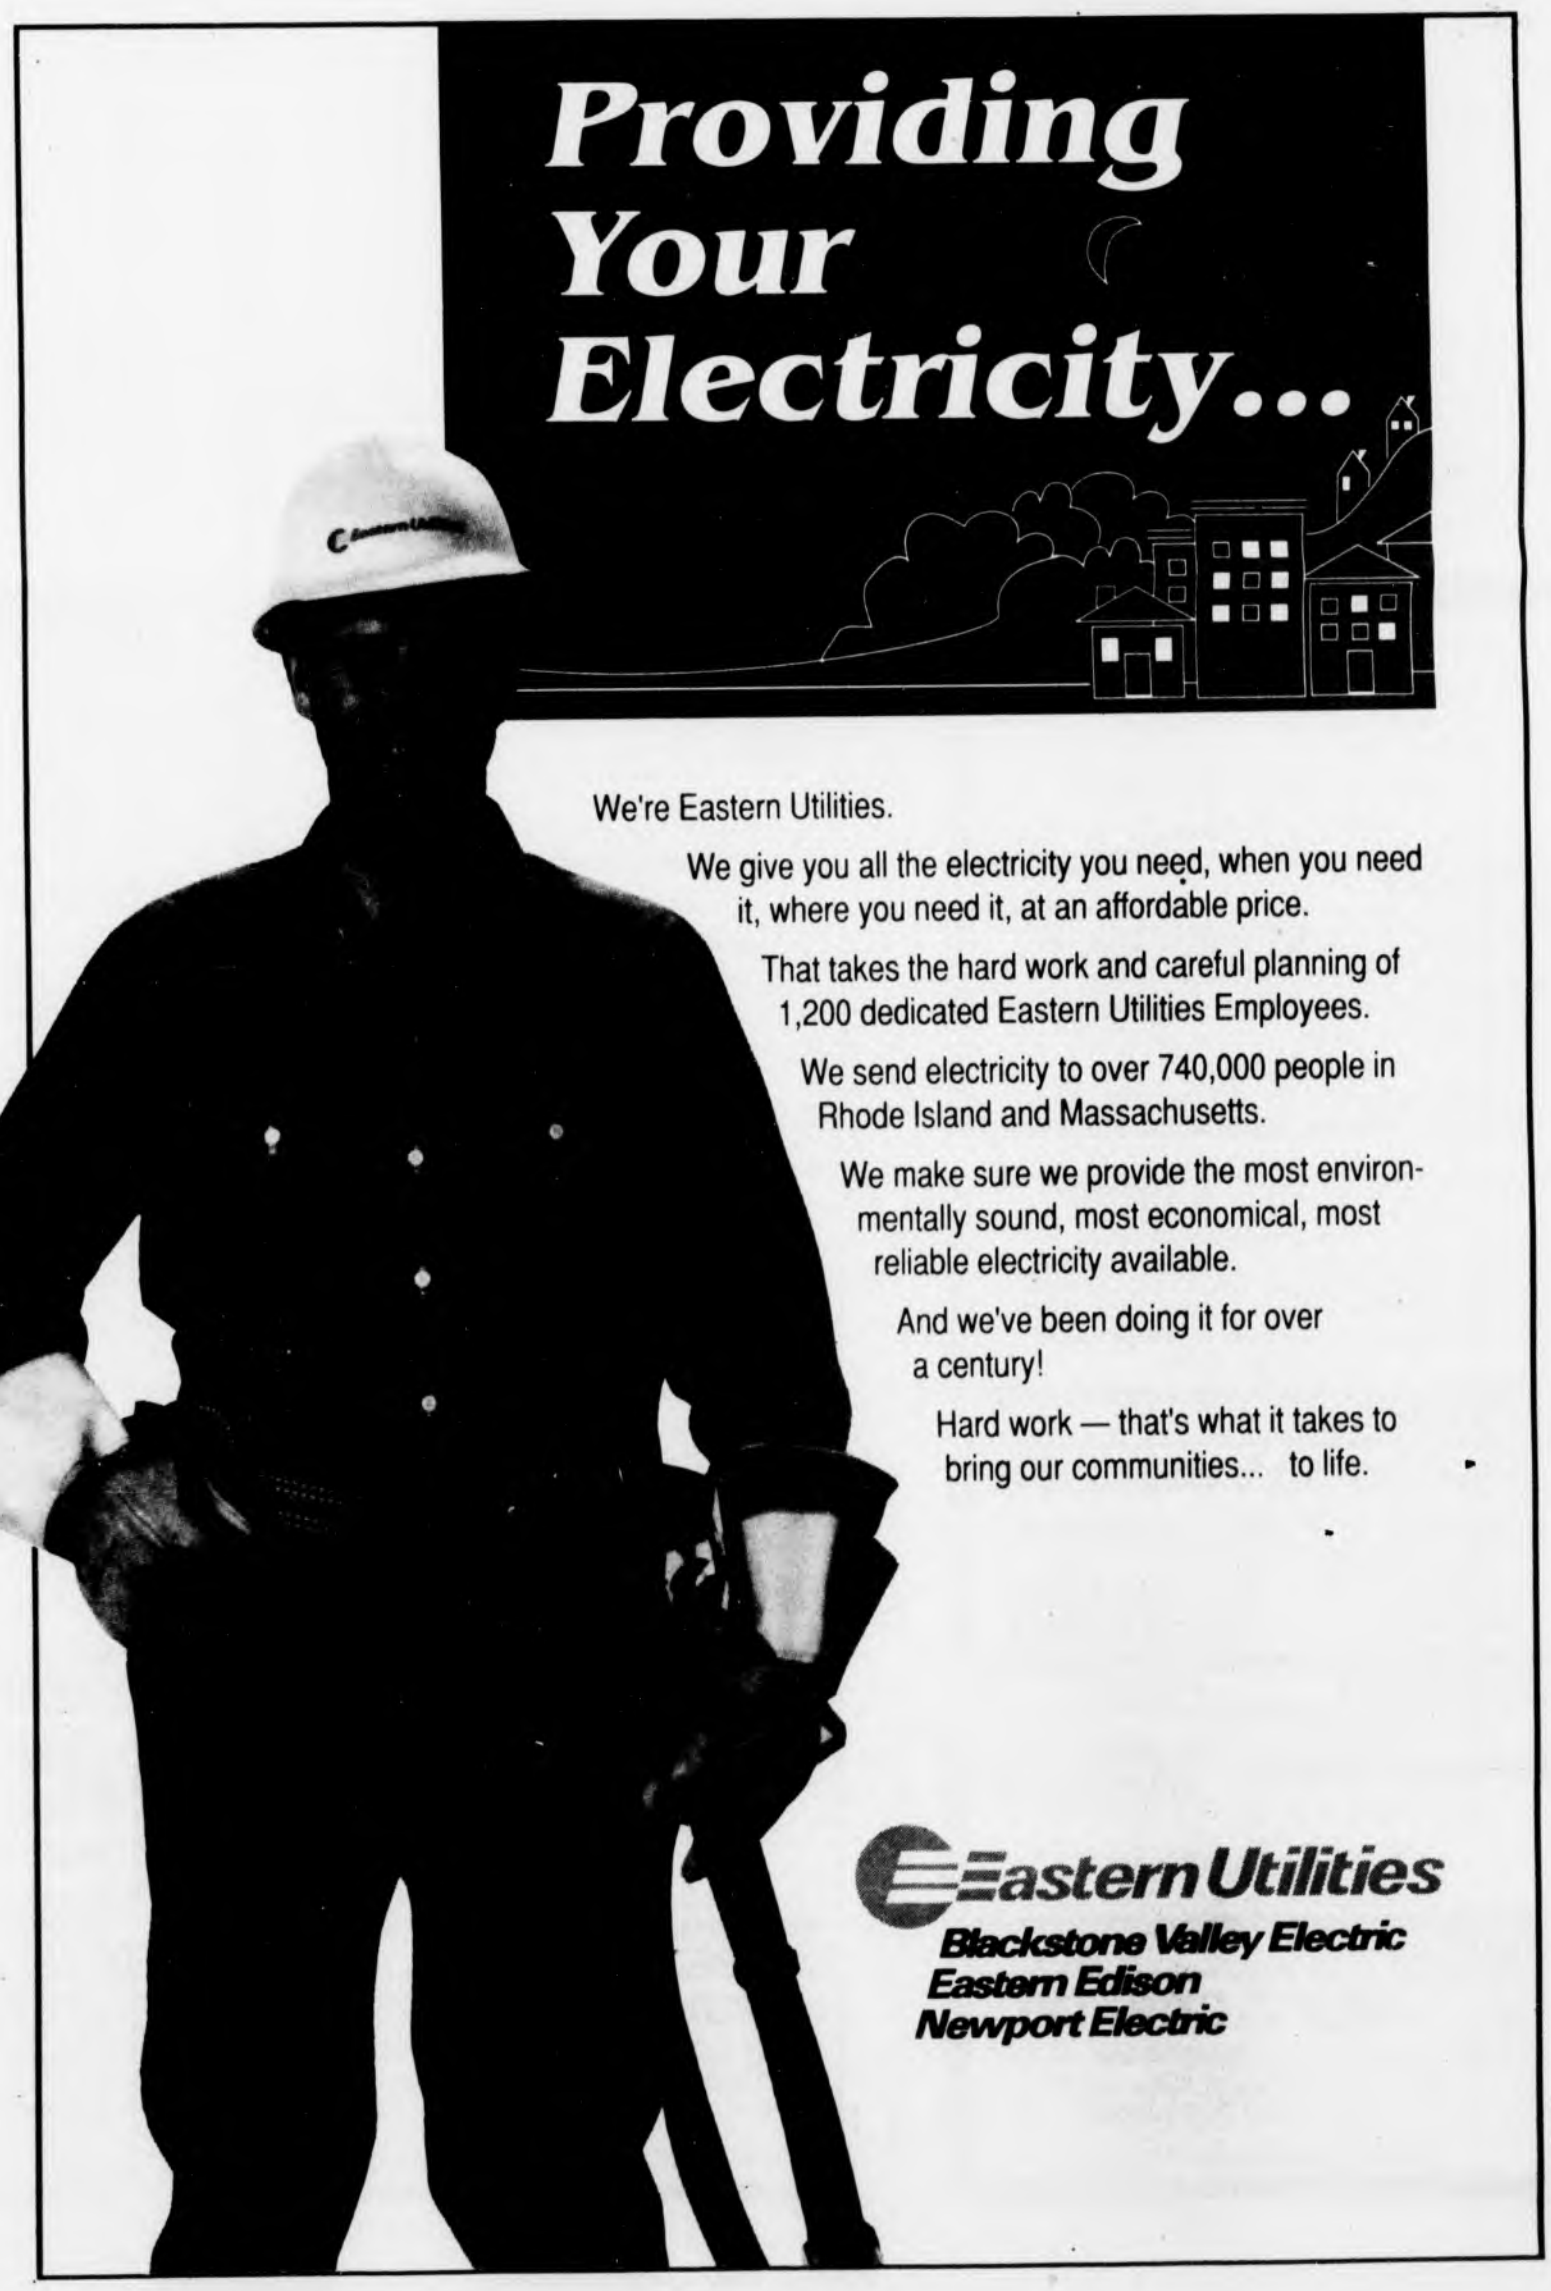
One of her favorite exercises — and a favorite with the kids — is the "accidental art." They put paint or ink on a piece of paper, fold it in half to create a Rorschach blot — and then add to the "blot" to illustrate what they see. Parents tell her that the kids come home and show all their friends how to do accidental art.

She also encourages the children to use each other for inspiration by nipping complaints about copying in the bud.

"I say it's okay. It's not copying but inspiring and trying a new technique," Rizzoto explained.

Rizzoto runs the workshops for five weeks, takes a break and then starts a new series. Some children can't wait for the next session to begin.

The summer session just ended — and the children are celebrating by displaying the fruits of their labors in the garden that inspired them in a clothesline art show.



"It really is on my clothesline," Rizzoto said. The work is also displayed on the barn door and the artists' bodies.

The exhibition is open to the general public and workshop alumni. Weather permitting, the artists and their creations will be in the garden Sunday, Sept. 9 from 1 p.m. to 2 p.m. Registration for art classes starting in October will be taken at that time.

For directions or to sign up for the October session, call Lynn Rizzoto at 749-2453.

Teacher Sharon Weber:

To live is to dance

By Alison Cohen
Mariner staff

To live is to dance. And vice versa.

Snoopy said it. Cohasset resident Sharon Weber proves the point.

Weber sparkles into life when she even talks about dancing — whether as performer, teacher, choreographer or observer. This fall she's especially excited.

Just back from Jacob's Pillow, the dance center in Massachusetts, her head is stuffed with new ideas for herself and her students.

"There's almost an earthquake of possibilities," Weber said. She's just rarin' to get started.

She just began working with Cohasset high school teacher Ron Emmons and the drama students on a production of Godspell slated for an early November performance. Part of her work involves choreography for the musical, but she is also doing dance workshops for the cast.

"I'm having so much fun," Weber said. "It's exciting working with the kids."

She begins teaching her new dance classes soon.

Weber teaches dance at the South Shore Conservatory on Fort Hill in Hingham. Her students hail from Cohasset, Hanson, Hingham, Norwell, Randolph, Rockland, Scituate, Weymouth and points all around the compass. She brings a variety of experience and training to her students.

Weber received a bachelor of science in dance from the University of Massachusetts. She also studied in New York with the renowned Joffrey Ballet and Martha Graham. Weber is equally proud of her training with Maria Paquet in Boston.

Prior to settling in Cohasset, she was a member of the Prairie Dance Company in Oklahoma. The Southwestern influence is apparent in the decor of her Oak Street home. She was director of dance and drama at Fisher Junior College before joining the faculty at the conservatory.

Students can choose from a range of possibilities. The youngest sign up for dance exploration. Older students can choose from dance fundamentals, ballet I, ballet II or point (toe).

The newest offering is "Dance for Boys Only." Weber can't wait to start working with the male of the species.

The idea of a boys-only class occurred to her when she offered a creative movement program for the four kindergarten classes at Joseph Osgood School. Weber frequently volunteers her time and talents in the school system. The work she does in the school is independent of the conservatory.

"The little girls were trying to impress me with their pliés and arabesques. They've taken or seen ballet," she said. "But the little boys were just out there doing all this wonderful stuff."

Getting men — and boys — into ballet is good for them and good for dance.

"Men bring a very exciting element to dance," Weber said. "They use more thrust in their movements. They're riskier and they break down barriers."

Mindful of how strong the social stigma of "ballet is only for girls and sissies" is, she thought a separate class would be just the ticket.

"They don't have to be afraid they'll be the only boy in class," Weber said. "And the movements will be a little more aggressive. I'll do a lot of improvisation with them.

"It will be like the difference between my son's birthday party and my daughter's birthday party."

Any class she teaches will feature the four basic elements of movement: body, space, time and energy. Then she coordinates the movements, creates combinations and before her students know what's happening, they're dancing.

The improvisational work is key to getting beginners to relax and not be stiff and self-conscious.

"You can't do it wrong," Weber said. "All movement is a walk, hop, skip or jump, but it never gets boring."

Although she said dancers are trained to see and use their bodies as a tool, as their instrument, her classes sound like child's play with themselves as the toys.
